BEIRUT - A Lebanese man returning to Beirut after a six-week vacation abroad found many changes in the city. Predictably, in a country that has en-

Trash pickups have stopped because the garbage dump is in a combat zone in southern Beirut. In West Beirut, garbage has been spilling into streets already full of rubble from demolished buildings.

Some traffic congestion has eased in recent weeks because of a fuel shortage. The importing of gasoline has been hampered by a sharp rise in the value of the dollar against the Lebanese pound.

The fuel shortage has led to a bread shortage because bakery ovens use diesel oil. Power rationing has increased because the state-run grid also runs on U.S. aircraft carriers and other warships that have been sailing off the Lebanese coast for the past three weeks have beightened expectations of U.S. military action to rescue the hostages.

The maneuvers and a State Department order last month for Americans to leave Lebanon within 30 days or have their passports revoked have aroused anger among the few remaining Americans

Washington Post Service VATICAN CITY — A Vatican appeal to the world's Catholics for additional funds to offset the church's growing budget deficits has met with such feeble response that rigid austerity measures have been ordered for the church's administration here, according to Vatican sources.

A letter sent to all Vatican offices recently by Cardinal Agnelo Rossi, the Holy See's administrative head, ordered all departments to hold their spending to last year's levels, according to these sources. This was necessary, the letter

U.S. Latin Expert Accuses Official of 'McCarthyism' By John M. Goshko

The investigation exonerated Mr. McNell, 54, of charges that be gave a confidential departmental document to The Washington Post and provided felse information about the U.S. ambassador in Venezuela to the press there.

In addition, Mr. McNeil asserted that Mr. Abrams's opposition had prevented his nomination as ambassador to Peru even though he had been tentatively recommended for the post by senior department

Reagan to Delay Request for More Contra Aid

By Elaine Sciolino New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — Prospects for a renewal of congressional aid to Nicaragnan rebels are so bleak that the Reagan administration has de-cided to postpone its formal request for several months, according to administration officials. They said Wednesday that the request for $105 million in new aid would probably not be made until September, when the administration hopes the political climate will have improved.

Even then, the outlook remains grim, as the request is expected to coincide with the comple-tion of potentially embarrassing investigations by congressional select committees and a special prosecutor into the secret arms sales to Iran and the diversion of profits to the Nicaraguan

Listing problems affecting the administra-tion's ability to persuade Congress to provide new aid for the contras, as the insurgents are known, officials point to the expected resignation of an important civilian leader of the rebel movement, the absence of any major rebel military victories after more than four years in the field, reports of human rights ahuses by the contras, the increasing reluctance of Nicaragua's neighbors to shelter them, internal squab-hling within the administration and continuing revelations in the Iran-contra affair.

There have been sharp divisions even within the State Department on how to pursue the contra policy.

The most dramatic is the retirement of the deputy director of the Bureau of Intelligence and Research, Francis J. MeNeil, an expert on Latin America in the department, who charged that his analysis of American policy in Central America made him the victim of an "exercise in McCarthyism" by Elliott Abrams, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs.

The disarray in contra policy is unlikely to affect the $40 million final installment of the $100 million appropriated last year for the cootras. A hill to cut the $40 million is not expected to receive the necessary two-thirds vote in both houses to override a presidential veto. But the intensity of the opposition could set the tone for the expected debate in the fall

"The administration is obviously trying to buy time," said Senator Christopher J. Dodd, Democrat of Connecticut and co-sponsor of the hill to cut the $40 million. "If there were a vote in Congress today to renew aid, Republicans and Democrats alike would reject it. Mr. Ahrams acknowledged that the contras could run out of money during the summer. although he emphasized that the $40 million is supposed to last until the end of September. Mr. Ahrams conceded that the expected resignation of Arturo José Cruz, an economist and former official of the Sandinist government whose leadership has been important in getting Congress to approve contra aid, would hurt the Reagan administration's ability to obtain new financing for the rebels,

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State George P. Shultz had a tense ald Reagan on Nov. 20 after learning that testimony prepared for William J. Casey, then the CIA director, would misinform the Senate intelligence committee the next day about arms sales to Iran, according to officials.

Mr. Shultz's urgent appeal to Mr. Reagan in the White House living quarters, and a parallel objection made to the Justice Department by Mr. Shultz's legal counsel, prompted Attorney General Edwin Meese 3d to begin an investigation into the affair, the officials said

It was this inquiry that culminated in Mr. Meese's disclosure five days later that money from the Iran arms deal had been diverted to aid the Nicaraguan rebels. Mr. Casey's proposed testimony, drafted by the Central Intelligence Agency and the National Security Council, would have disclaimed any U.S. government knowledge of a shipment of HAWK anti-aircraft missiles from Israel to Iran in No-vember 1985, the sources said. The statement emphasized that the delay was not caused by Mr. Reagan's testimony or by the drug overdose taken by Robert C. McFarlane, the former national security adviser who had been scheduled to appear before the panel Monday.

Other investigative bodies besides the Tower panel, including House and Senate committees have found evidence that National Security Council aides worked with the Nicaraguan rebels known as the contras in the period when U.S. involvement was sharply restricted by law. The sources said the Tower commission had uncovered striking material relating to this activity.

Mr. Reagan discussed his part in the Iran arms deal, and the subse-quent diversion of profits to the Nicaraguan rebels, in a 70-minute meeting Wednesday with the three-in a statement afterward, the president's chief spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, said: "Today's meeting discussed the National Security Council process and the develop-rment and execution of the Iran policy and the president's role."

The many investigations of the Iran affair have still not determined how much the president knew about the operation that was being run out of the White House or when he gave his approval. It is also unclear when he learned about the transfer of profits from that deal to the contras.

Mr. Reagan has denied knowing about the diversion at the time it occurred last year.

Last month officials familiar with the Tower panel's investigation said little progress was being made. But in recent days those offi cials have indicated that a breakthrough might be imminent.

They've got something," one of-ficial said.

Since mid-December the panel has interviewed more than 50 ma-"This very moeb concerned jor figures in the Iran affair as well Shultz," one official said, because as former administration officials with intimate knowledge of the White House foreign policy ma-Late last month investigators went to Europe to interview Manucher Ghorbanifar, the Iranian who served as middleman for the deal, and Adnan M. Khashoggi, the Saudi arms dealer who helped finance the transactions.

Meanwhile, a dispute surfaced Wednesday between the Tower board and the White House over the handling of Mr. Reagan's private notes on the Iran affair.

Notes relating to certain key dates were requested by the panel. After the president and his counsel, Peter Wallison, reviewed the matetial, typed excerpts deemed rele-Reagan in what appears to have vant by the White House were delivered to the panel Tuesday afternoon

But the panel had to read the notes while a White House courier stood by, waiting to take back the material

We were not permitted to make copies of the notes, and we couldn't keep them," said an official conoected with the Tower board. Mr. Fitzwater, the president's spokesman, was asked how such an arrangement could be reconciled with Mr. Reagan's frequent assertions that he wanted all informaleased as quickly as possible. The spokesman replied that it was difficult to balance the White House's desire to provide information and the desire to "protect the privacy of the president.

Mr. Fitzwater also discussed the president's decision not to order two former aides, Vice Admiral John M. Poindexter and Lieutenant Colonel Oliver L. North, to testify before the Tower board.

The board had asked Mr. Reagan to use his power as commander in chief to order the two officers to testify. They have refused to talk, invoking the constitutional safeguard against self-incrimination.

In a statement issued Tuesday night, Mr. Pitzwater said such an order "would be unlawful" because it would violate the officers' constitutional rights as well as the Uniform Code of Military Justice. On Wednesday, he said that, had such an order been issued and had the two officers testified, they might have acquired "total immunity" from prosecution relating to the arms deal and its aftermath "If they chose to comply with an illegal order and testify," he said, they would "put themselves in a position where, in effect, total immunity would be granted, because in any subsequent prosecution it could be argued that their testimony was gained illegally."

He said the "immunity question" was part of the reason Mr. Reagan rejected the appeal of the Tower board, even though the president has repeatedly urged the two to testify voluntarily.

Freeing Soviet Prisoners

Moscow is starting to free some political prisoners. The Sakharovs were early and conspicuous beneficiaries of this turn, and others less well known are now coming out. Their number evidently includes some bundreds sentenced under the catchall offense of "anti-Soviet agitation," by which the anthorities long have repressed dissent and answered appeals for human rights and emigration. Andrei Sakharov, recently allowed by Mikhail Gorbachev personally to return to work in Moscow, was enabled by his courage and celebrity to continue cam-Paigning for the freedom of those still under detention of one sort or another. Those now being freed, less fortunate, must ask for pardon and promise not to engage in "anti-Soviet" activities.

The terms on which the prisoners are rejoining the Soviet society are still up in the air, an intensely political matter that no doubt will be negotiated continuously between officials and prisoners and among officials; the foreign response will be a certain part of the negotiation too. But it is evident that the society the prisoners are rejoining, after — for many of them terrible ordeals of imprisonment and forced drugging, is far from free. For all of Mr. Gorbachev's "new thinking," it remains a society of rules imposed from the top down. not of rights asserted from the bottom up. It is a society, moreover, where "at the moment we are heading into a softening," as a Soviet spokesman announcing the new releases acknowledged, while adding that "there are comrades who think, the harsher the better," In short, things could change. Plainly, Mr. Gorbachev wants the advantages that relexation can confer in domestic morale and international image without the disadvantages associated in n totalitarian society with losing control. Still, it is almost always better to be outside the bars and the barbed wire in the Soviet Union than to be inside. Real people are leaving real prisons. In the past the Kremlin has acted as though practically the whole population was seething and likely to revolt if given the smallest chance. The leadership in Moscow now appears more confident. In any event, it surely knows police and judicial cruelties are far from its only measures of control.

Americans like to see police states experimenting with a touch of relaxation. Not only is it a moral outrage the way the Kremlin usually treats many of its citizens. To the extent that the Communist Party elite decides to defer to the needs of the Soviet people, it will perhaps be less likely to put its resources and energies into excessive arms and foreign adventures, although this is obviously not going to trim the claws

But it is well to be wary of small cosmetic changes in Soviet buman rights practice that cannot be easily verified, that leave whole large categories of wrongs unrighted and that can be choked off overnight. General Secretary Gorbachev has piqued international and, presumably, Soviet interest with the changes he has begun so far. To overcome the prevailing suspicion about Soviet purposes and to sustain approval of his policy, be must demonstrate that these bttle changes were not designed simply to allow him to evade deeper ones.

Why Not Mars, Together?

A country with a $4 trillion gross national product can afford a vigorous space program that meets practical needs and stirs people's sense of adventure. The musty plans and cramped vision of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration lack both utility and imagination. The space agency will spend $9.5 billion for next year's space show. Instead of reaching to stretch man's grasp, NASA's engineers are planning more plumbing.

The agency's main future project is a space station, assembled from a scaffold and modules flown up on 32 shuttle trips. The station serves no great goal, just a multitude of minor missions to muster the widest support from all possible users. That is expensive. Projected costs have already soared from $8 billion to $13 billion.

Many of its missions could be met in other ways, but supplying hardware is what keeps the space agency busy. Like the shuttle, the space station is not an end but a means, infrastructure, built for when a president someday decides what to do with it. No wonder the space program has become a yawn.

Consider two ways to put discovery and excitement back into space.

Plan A would be a program of scientific exploration. By putting telescopes in orbit, above the distorting veil of the Earth's atmosphere, astronomers can see the universe with much greater clarity. The Voyager probes that flew by Jupiter, Saturn and Uranus showed what startling close-ups automated spacecraft can obtain in exploring the solar system. Satellites that monitor landscape and atmosphere can provide a trove of useful data.

The NASA exploration program has had to struggle for existence over the last 15 years, constantly hacked back or stretched out each time the space shuttle ran over cost. Still, achievements like the Voyagers and the infrared Astronomical Satellite space telescope give a taste of what rich returns might come from a space program

Already the next wave of buman suffering breaks over Africa, this time the southern third of the continent. Here, in Angola and Mozambique, are the highest infant mortality rates in the world. Here, in the war, ethnic rivalry and drought threaten starvation and wrenching migrations.

The United States has announced $93 million in long-promised aid but even that hardly begins to address the gathering tragedy. If Washington is serious, n three-part policy could begin to alleviate the misery. South Africa looms large for these "front line" states. It dominates them economically. More than two-thirds of their foreign trade passes through it. And South Africa destabilizes the region with covert and overt military operations. To break Pretoria's grip, the nine have joined in economic ∞- operation. They hope to strengthen road

American moods. There have been several recent harmful indulgences, like Congress committed to increasing knowledge about the cosmos.

Space exploration would have little use for shuttles or space stations. Lifting humans and their life support and safety systems into space is prohibitively expensive and serves almost no scientific purpose. Astronauts would stay safely on the ground, flying spacecraft by remote control. Instead of resting content with the 1960s technology of shuttles and space stations, the program would push new frontiers by developing automated spacecraft and space-going robots.

The robot R2D2 in the "Star Wars" movies had no trouble capturing the public's imagination, but NASA remains persuaded that human presence in space is essential to maintaining public support. That may no longer be true, but even if it is, a manned space program needs a clearer purpose than NASA has yet advanced.

What might it be? What Plan B might stirringly accompany Plan A, the cheap and effective core of any rational space program? Humans have already been to the moot and hung around in space stations. Mercury is too hot and Venus ton inhospitable. That leaves Mars, which robots could explore better.

But going to Mars jointly with the Soviet venture would foster a broad-based collaboration and might help divert superpower rivalry into less dangerous channels. If so, it would well justify the cost and the risk of buman life.

Mr. Reagan has endorsed two bad ideas, the space station and sharing technology developed in the Strategic Defense Initiative with the Soviets. Going to Mars with them would give NASA a goal worth aiming for. Scrapping the white elephant space station would free funds for vigorous explo-ration of the universe. The public thirsts for both science and adventure; the planned space station is a poor vehicle for either. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

One of the hottest "bright ideas"

being pushed, in the midst of the Iran arms affair, is that the United States

"or in Central America."

Others who have proposed a scaling back of U.S. forces in Europe to increase the ability to intervence elsewhere include former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger (who has suggested up to a 50 percent withdrawal of troops from NATO), the neconservative Irving Kristol (who predicts that "sooner or later" American troops will be out of Europe anyway). and the U.S. News & World Report publisher, Mortimer Zuckerman.

Such thinking has gained ground partly because the huge federal defi-cit has made the military budget vulcat has made the military blugger vin-nerable to tough-minded congressio-nal scrutiny: Those who propose new military initiatives must say how they will be paid for. Given political oppo-sition to higher taxes and unwillingness to accept further cuts in domestic programs, European defense— roughly half the $300 billion Penta-gon budget—is a natural target. Since U.S. military spending as a percentage of gross national product is far greater than the European aver-age, the reluctance of many of America's allies to fulfill pledges to increase their NATO contributions has also made Congress uneasy.

Many policy analysts recognize that the Soviets, who cannot even control Afghanistan, would be insane to try to take over the entire Continent (even if they could do so without triggering nuclear war). Senator Claiborne Pell, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, has challenged the notion that the East has a conventional force advan-tage over NATO. He points out that the Soviets cannot easily withdraw troops from the Chinese front; cannot rely on so-called allies in Eastern Europe; have inferior technical capabilities in several important weapon areas, and do not come close to enjoying the 3 to 1 ratio of forces commonly considered essential if attack-ing forces are to have any hope of overcoming a serious defense.

The most important source of the new "cut NATO, expand intervention forces" proposals is probably simply policy makers' recurrent desire to have men and munitions available "the resired adaption available." able "to project adequate power" when they think it useful, no matter what the costs. In this case, the goal is a much larger intervention capacity than that provided by the force struc-ture in place after six full years of a military buildup.

Before the idea that the Unite States ought to increase its ability to go to war in the Third World gains further momentum, the post-Reagan strategy dialogue should move out of quiet expert discussions and into public debate. The key questions appear to be: when (not "if") the United States scales back spending for Europe, will the money be used to reduce the deficit, fund domestic programs and belp avoid new taxes? Or will it be used to prepare for military ventures not even this administration has dared ask Congress to support?

Image vs. Substance: A Subtler Superpower Contest

By Dominique Moisi

DARIS — In the East-West con-I frontation, images are as impor-tant as more objective factors, such as the arms race. On this count, the Soviet Union has recently fared bet-ter than the United States. The results of Reykjavik and the revelations of Irangate have revived in France an old, negative image of the United States, all the more prececupying because it coincides with a new and more positive image of the Soviet Union under an energetic leader who is beating Ronald Reagan at his own game of public relations. In the early 1980s, America's new assertiveness and nationalism reassured Europeans. The Soviets had just intervened in Afghanistan, and the two superpowers were engaged in a test of will over Euromissiles. America's new strength and determination were welcomed by a Socialist France, which had to prove it could be a reliable partner despite the Communist presence in the government. The new openness to America was reinforced by a deterioration of the Soviet image brought by Alexander Solzhenitsyn's denunciation of the Gulag and by Soviet expansionism. Those exceptional years contin-ued after the Euromissile victory, despite strains over trade, economic sanctions, and policy toward Central America and South Africa, But U.S.-French relations are now entering an accelerated process of erosion, of mutual dissatisfaction and disillusion.

France's refusal to let U.S. planes fly over it during the Libya raids reopened wounds in America that were only superficially closed. Again, Washington believed one could not rely ou the selfish, sbortsighted French. They had stooped for oil in the 1970s; they were seeking accommodation with terrorists in the 1980s. France's disillusion came later. It was less emotional, but perhaps deeper, the result of Reykjavík and Iran-diplomatic venture, the other a selfdefeating bureaucratic process. At Reykjavik, the Reagan administration gave the impression of joining those "revisionist" powers that were trying to define a world beyond nuclear deterrence, therefore destabilizing, in the name of morality, a world order based on the balance of terror. Beyond the fear that the superpowers would once again jointly manage the world, there was the apprehen-sion that the benefits of the Euromissile victory would be lost in a growing military imbalance in Europe and that French nuclear forces would, in one way or another, be counted in any future arms negotiations.

Irangate confirmed French apprehensions: Not only were the Americans unpredictable, amateurish, and adventurist, but their diplomacy was unreliable and incompetent.

The arms sales raised the question: Is American foreign policy destined to fail because it is the product of one of the most complex democratic sys-tems in the world? The intricate checks and balances between the executive branch and the Congress, and the sophisticated, suicidal games within the executive, seem best to fit an isolationist America. They do not correspond to the foreign policy needs of the world's leading power.

The return to a more traditional image of the United States in France, characterized by n measure of condescension and irritation, is occurring at a time when the Soviet image also is changing. Because the French intelligentsia had to make up for its long infatuation with "the mother-land of socialism," the French were

This phase, in France, of the discovery of the Soviet Union's "evil nature," gave way slowly in 1985-86 to one that could be characterized as one of the "banalization of evil." The Antarctica Mining Talks: At Stake Is a Whole Continent

The Disillusion Behind a Cry for Help

WASHINGTON — My fre-quently expressed view of Robert C. McFarlane has been that of a man out of his depth as national security adviser, bitterly disappointed at never receiving the respect and acclaim accorded to a Kissinger or a Brzezinski, who was straining to match the strategic achievement of a China opening or a Camp David agreement with his own reaching out "moderates" in Iran.

His lawyer, Leonard Garment, is a friend of mine from the Nixon years. He told me I was harsh in my estimate of the man and his motives, and pointed to Mr. McFarlane's willing-ness to brave testimony under oath before Congress and a special prose-cutor, unlike other key NSC military colleagues. I suggested an interview.
We met late in January for a short talk. A few days later he scheduled a longer session for Monday of this week, but that turned out to be the day he took an overdose of Valium. He is now recuperating at the same naval bospital that cared for Oliver North's mental problems a decade ago. Some impres How he started and tried to stop the

Iran dealings: Ariel Sharon of Israel was rebuffed on this twice by Secretary of State Alexander Haig in May 1981 and May 1982, I was told by Mr. Haig. When a former Haig aide, Mi-chael Ledeen, broached the idea of an Iran opening to Mr. McFarlane in April 1985, Mr. McFarlane let him sound out Prime Minister Shimon Peres, assuming an approach to Iran would be well received by Israel, which it was. By the end of 1985, Mr. for the establishment of the Republic McFarlane considered his strategic probe had degenerated into a hostage ransom, and thought he turned it off. Why he then quit the White House:

Mr. McFarlane was neither a person-ment of n Republic; the second acal friend of Ronald Reagan's nor a cepts the conditions agreed upon beman of independent achievement, tweets Yuan-Shih-Kai and the When the State and Defense departments clashed, be did not have the clout to resolve the issues or get the that the Throne retires from political president to decide.

And I think he is still protecting the president.

Did he really try to kill himself? Yes and no. If he made a conscious decision beforehand, he would not have used Valium; Mr. McFarlane not inept. Feeling abandoned and whipsawed, blaming himself for all the consequences of his errors, he impulsively gulped down a whole bottle of pills. In our talk, I asked how a former N EW YORK — In the early morning of March 13, 1964, a woman named Catherine Genovese walked to her home on Austin Street in the bor-ough of Queens and was stabbed in death. Her killer attacked her once, ran when she screamed, returned again, attacked again and then once more. And while she screamed her young life out on Austin Street, 38 people, by police count, heard her. Some raised their windows. Not one did anything to come to ber help or even called the police.

In life, tew knew her outside her family but in the manner of her dying, and because of the silent witnesses, she lives. Studies have been made of the Genovese case, psychologists have dissected it and seminars are still held about it in universities. She lives on in many individual memories, including my own.

I was involved, as an editor, in the coverage of ber death. For a long time I could not drive the story from my mind. I hoped that I would never be a silent witness. But I know that now I am.

Almost every day I see a body sprawled on the sidewalk. Some days I see quite a oumher. Some show signs of life; others are still. I assume they are all alive but I never stop to find out, or bend over to see if I could be of help. They do not scream, as did Catherine Genovese. If they did I would probably walk away even laster. They are dirty, sometimes foul, unattractive victims. I do hear people screaming, almost every day and sometimes several times a day. They do not lie on the ground but run about the streets.

I feel better about passing them by

A Salvo for the Homeless

SUDDENLY, two pieces of legislation to help the homeless—one for $50 million in emergency funds, the other for a $500 million long-term package of programs—are rolling with the kind of momentum that seems to have "sure thing" written all over it.

Representative Jim Wright, the new speaker of the House, is backing the two bills strongly. And on Feb. 4, Congress sent the $50 million bill to the president.

The zeal of the new House leadership is unreal. A sum of $550 million has been the kind of money Congress untaps only when the Pentagon wants a new toy. Maybe the politicians are hearing it wrong; perhaps they think the money is for the USS Homeless, a new submarine. - Colman McCurthy.

and Governor Mario Cuomo do something about it, aren't they elected to do things like that, for God's sake?
When it is very cold, I see people wrapped in cardboard, bag ladies sbuffling in the night streets to keep warm. I tell myself: It's really better when it is cold. Don't the cops have to take them off the street when it freezes, whether they like it or pot? whether they like it or not?

Sometimes I get very angry - angry at the bodies for making me so uncom-fortable, angry at the cops and the hos-pital people for not taking them somewhere they can be taken care of, angry at the jodges and the civil libertarians who have changed the vagrancy laws so the police can't make people get off the streets and into someplace or other.

The new laws hold that homelessness is not a crime; all right, as long as they don't park themselves outside my door.

I do not like that at all.

And what about really sick people, sick in the head? The law says that in New York state a mentally ill person must be a danger to himself or others and unable to "survive safely outside a hospital" before being taken off the street. Is that surviving safely, running up and down the street screaming? What about my rights? Do I have to hear them about my rights? Do I have to hear them and see them? What do I pay taxes for?

It helps a little, getting mad at the lawyers and the judges and the mayor and the governor, mad at the bodies lying still on the ground or the bodies running screaming through the street. Then, sometimes, and more often re-cently, I think of Catherine Genovese and the way she died and the 38 witnesses. I check ont a bittle book I wrote about the case then and find that I didn't really attack the 38 and wrote that anyone might bave done the same.

I am glad that I was not too high and mighty about those witnesses because now I am the 39th. And if you live in a city where living bodies be in the streets or roam them in pain, and walk by, so are you.

Of course you and I could search out some of the people and organizations who do help the street sleepers and the street screamers and maybe do some-thing ourselves. But, I don't know about you, but I am pretty busy these days, so maybe some other time.

The Victorians Reconsidered: A Curious, Restless Amalgam

By David Cannadine

N EW YORK — Despite the undoubted antiquity of the British monarchy, many of its so-called traditional aspects are in fact no older than the Statue of Liberty. Its broadly based popular appeal, its position above the battle of politics and its incomparably splendid ceremonial - all of which were in evidence at last year's royal wedding — only date hack in their present form to the Golden Jubilee of Queen Victoria, celebrated 100 years ago in 1887.

The centenary of that first modern royal jamboree provides an ideal opportunity for reassessing the Victorian Age and the Victorian monarchy - a monarchy that contained the seeds of the future but also owed much to the past. It is often supposed that from the very beginning, Queen Victoria and Prince Albert inaugurated a new and modern style of monarchy, turning their backs on the debts, divorces and dehauchery of their Hanoverian predecessors and establishing a very different royal re-gime, hased on decency and dutifulness. Under Albert's tutelage, Victoria aban-doned her early partiality for the Whigs and sought in place the monarchy above political parties. And their cozy, com-fortable family life at Osborne and Balmoral, so effectively evoked by Winterhalter and Landseer, seemed the very model of bourgeois decorum.

But for all its modern overtones this is only a partial picture of the early Victorian monarchy. However hard she tried, the queen could never obliter ate her Hanoverian ancestry.

Physically, she bore a marked resem-blance to her grandfather, King George III, and like all the Hanoverians she was highly sexed. Her eldest son, the Prince of Wales and future King Edward VII, resembled King George IV in his greed, his gluttony, his debts and his philander-ing. And Victoria's impassioned and unyielding opposition to Irish home rule in the 1880s was reminiscent of George III's hostility to American independence 100 years before.

Nor did Victoria and Albert seek to remove the mooarchy from all active political involvement. On the contrary, in their ardent support of the prime minister, Sir Robert Peel, and their violent hostility to the foreign secretary, Lord Palmerston, they remained incorngibly and unapologetically partisan.

Albert bombarded government ministers with letters and memorandums, believed it was his duty to "watch and cootrol" government and sought to in-crease the political power of the monarcby, not reduce it. And Victoria agreed. protesting throughout her reign that she cannot and will not be the queen of a democratic monarchy."

Even the picture of Victorian royal family life as a middle-class idyll needs modification. Victoria resented preg-nancy, hated child birth and was unable to establish a close relationship with any of her children. Albert found it impossible to suppress his anger and disap-pointment when the Prince of Wales did not grow up into the planned and pro-grammed puragoo he wanted his eldest son in be. Many of their children's marriages — like that of Victoria and Albert themselves — were arranged rather than amorous, according to the traditional dictates of dynastic aggrandizement. In all these ways, the early Victorian monarchy, like the early Victorian age, had more in common with what had gone before than it had with what was to come after. Only because of more deeply rooted changes in British and international society did late 19th century royalty evolve into a very different institution, based on personal populari-ty, political impartiality and spectacular ceremony. But while this may have been the beginning of the modern Brit-ish monarchy, it was more the denial than the fulfillment of Victoria and Albert's initial aspirations.

Like so many aspects of that volcanic and protean era we call the Victorian age — its politics, its religion, its culture, its architecture, its thought — the Victorian monarchy was a curious and restless amalgam of the past, the present and the future. As the 20th century perspective on the Victorians lengthens, we can begin to appreciate this diversity more vividly and thus strike a more accurate balance between what was old and what was oew in their civilization. And so, in learning more about them, we ultimately come to learn more about ourselves.

In Asia, the Free Market Works Without Freedom Avoiding Domino Panic

Instead, the four societies in Asia which have scored the best with market-related development have been authoritarian. It doesn't seem to matter if the authority is based upon a reviled treaty, as in Hong Kong; or if it espouses farcical ambitions, as Taiwan does with its aim to regain the mainland; or if it is nessed enough of its abuses and perpetually in the midst of a civil stumbles to be well aware of the war situation, as South Korea is; or primitiveness of this belief and if the agiog leader is going a bit its practices. Mr. Hofberg and others might profit by considering certain vital aspects of the Iran arms affair illuminated by Lieutenant Colonel Oliver North in a recent conversation with Neil Livingstone, president of the Institute on Terrorism and Subnational Conflict.

Documentation, including a letter to President Reagan from Hashemi Rafsanjani, speaker of the Iranian parliament, supports the thesis that the hostage and contraaid matters were secondary aspects of the U.S. overtures toward Iran. The underlying issue appears to have been much more crucial.

The Soviets, with the assistance of about 600 KGB operatives in Iran, had exploited the religious zeal of certain Iranian military leaders to lull them into the conviction that their planned "final offensive" against Iraq would deal a decisive blow to the forces of Saddam Hussein. In reality, the Iraqis had been secretly supplied with modern weapoory, including ebemical agents, which would have given them a staggering advantage against the ill-equipped Iranians.

Convioced that the United States would never alter its anti-Iran stance, the U.S.S.R. was ready to enter the strategic vacuum created by an Iraqi victory in order to fulfill a long-standing ambition: to extend its influence to the Gulf. Fortunately. U.S. allies in the Middle and Far East perceived the threat and convinced U.S. intelligence officials (who had thought Soviet troops in the region were connected with the Afghanistan adventure) of the seriousness and immediacy of the Soviet-orches-trated trap. DMITRI NABOKOV.

Seven years ago, the Baghdad regime escalated a war of words into one of the bloodiest conflicts of this century. It has initiated the bombing of civilian targets in a score of Iranian cities and bulldozed into rubble dozens of Iranian border settlements under the occupation of its forces. It has repeatedly waged chemical warfare with horrifying results. Evidence exists that is now preparing to use even deadlier nerve gases.

Iraq has deported over 200,000 citizens for being "subversive," while its treatment of Kurds, Jews and others has been amply documented by Amnesty International. All this by a regime that is drawn exclusively from a religious minor ity and dominated by a family clique beaded by Saddam Hussein. The panic of Mr. Hussein should not be allowed to become the panic of the West, or even of the other Arab states. Let the "domino theory" remain where it belongs: buried in the jungles of Southeast Asia.

Spain's Shaky Enclaves

Regarding the opinion col-umn "Complacency, Intrigue Are Closing In on Spain," (Feb. 4) by Victor de la Serna:

In addition to Socialist complacency in office, the disarray of the parliamentary right, and the politi-cal paralysis in the Basque country, there is another threat to Spain. This is the explosive situation of the enclaves of Melilla and Centa. Spain has promised in give nationality to the thousands of lifetime Moroccan residents of those cities, but it is acting so slowly, with such insensitivity to the feelings of the local Moslems, that unless a rapid change of policy and tactics occurs, it will be faced with a virtually insoluble nationalist-religious revolt in its North African enclaves. They had fled the "liberation," seeking sanctuary with a pathetic belief in British decency and the ideals of West. Their return was ordered Macmillan against the explicit order of Winston Churchill.

No Credit to Suharto

Regarding the article "In Indonesia, Questions on Length of Suharto's Rule" (Jan. 29):

Barbara Crossette says that "critics and admirers alike" credit President Suharto for "stabilizing" Indonesia and that "secessionis movements bave largely collapsed." One can only interpret this as a veiled reference to Indonesia's illegal and as yet incomplete occupation of the former Portuguese colony of East Timor, which de clared independence in 1975.

Mr. Suharto's success in East Timor has heavily relied on Skyhawks, napalm, chemical weapons and the mass murder of innocents. To credit him for this is like applauding Hitler for having eliminated minority dissent after the Warsaw ghetto massacre.

The Otieno dispute, however, is far more than a legal matter.

Across Africa, there are traditionalists, middle-aged and older people born in small villages, who believe that birth into a tribe entails privileges and duties that have nothing in do with free will or how one chooses to live one's life. For these Africans - epitomized by Mr. Orieno's brother and Luo clan elders — an African can no more wish away the laws of gravity.

By Kenyan standards, therefore, Mr. Otieno's widow, who goes by her Kikuyu name, Wambui, is ar astonishingly bold woman.

Since 198t, Kenya's inheritance laws have given widows, in the absence of a will — which Mr. Otieno never wrote - the right to inherit their husband's property. But according to a 1986 Dutch-funded study of women and land in Kenya, the law is ignored in most rural areas. A Royal Progress Through Scotland

On the 400 years-old trail of Mary, Queen of Scots, from her birth at Linlithgow (above), until her execution.

by James Barron

DINBURGH — Mary Queen of Scots, a much-traveled monarch, seems to have spent about half her reign on a horse, and many of the surviving castles she stayed in are being spruced up to mark the 400th anniversary of her death this year.

Mary, a devout Catholic in a nation torn by religious differences, remains extraordinarily popular. She accomplished little in foreign affairs and her domestic policy was undermined by the Scottish Parlia-ment, which cast off papal authority; her personal life was marred by marital disasters, bizarre intrigues and tragedies. But Mary's "royal progresses," trips in which she carried the throne to outlying areas of her turbulent kingdom, guaranteed her popularity in an age when commoners often lived out their lives without a glimpse of their rulers.

Of the places Mary knew, many are little more than an hour's drive from Edinburgh. To help tourists find their way through the moors and valleys that Mary crisscrossed in her lifetime, Scotland's Historic Buildings and Monuments Department, which cares for more than 30 sites associated with Mary, will publish a guidebook showing a "Mary Trail" later this year. But events to mark the anniversary have already begun. The University of Edinburgh sponsored a symposium. The Scottish National Portrait Gallery in Edinburgh plans a major summer exhibition of portraits of Mary and her contemporaries, and the Royal Museum of Scotand has scheduled an exhibition of relics,

From April to September relics from Mary's reign will be displayed in the bedroom she used during a visit to Earlshall Castle near St. Andrews, 10 miles (16 kilometers) from Dundee. On weekends in July and August, costume pageants will be held to mark her visit in 1561... From May 25 to Sept. 3 the National Library of Scotland in Edinburgh will hold an exhibition on the Stuarts in literature, legend

Mary was less than a year old when she was crowned without significant ceremony after the death of her father, James V, in 1542. The installation took place at Stirling, a castle on an extinct volcano northwest of Edinburgh. She was then shuttled from stronghold to stronghold and, when she was 5 she was shipped to France for safety. There she married the Dauphin at 16 and became Queen of France as well as of Scotland. Her husband died within three years after the marriage and within a year she was back in Edinburgh. Mary was born 20 miles outside the

Scottish capital, at Linlithgow, which will hold a weeklong festival starting Aug. 15, with jousting pageants and medieval ban-

Linlithgow, where Mary spent the first seven months of her life, later served as a resting place during her progresses. It was also the site of Edinburgh University in 1545, when the plague was raging in the capital. Now there is moss on Linhingow's fireplaces, spider webs in its kitchen and the sky for a mof; visitors find it hard to imagine this ruin was once a splendid

But in the 16th century, Liulithgow was an opulent favorite of the royal family, which visited it at least once a year. Mary's father, James V, was born there, and Mary herself was born in a suite in the northwest corner. The suite collapsed in 1607, and while its walls were shored up, it remains roofless. Contrast that with the way it must have been when Mary's mother, Mary of Guise, compared Linlithgow to the castles of the Loire, John Leslie, Bishop of Ross, said the loch beside the palace other notable fishes," and John Ray, the Scottish naturalist, called it "a very good house, as houses go in Scotland."

lar shape was the idea of James V. The first building on the site was a 12th-century wooden manor house that burned down in 1424. James's ancestors built a replacement in stone, but he ordered the structure enlarged and the entrance moved to where it is now. Parts of the old massive oak door and iron portcullis are still visible, as are niches that once contained statues. James's entrance has an arched doorway with a polygonal turret and gun ports.

Over the outer entry are carved 19th century representations of the insignia of the orders of knighthood to which James belonged — the Garter, the Thistle, the Fleece and St. Michael, Inside, James built a fountain that was nearly 18 feet (5.4 meters) tall, the first and finest of its kind in Scotland. Architectural historians marvel at its Late Gothic style. Today's visitors marvel at how the courtesans must have struggled to pump wine through the fountain on feast days. On ordinary occasions, water was drawn from a nearby spring through lead conduits, some of which are on display in the little museum on the castle's second floor.

In Mary's day Linht manent furnishings - everything except timber beds, trestle tables and long seats called forms was carried with the court from palace to palace - and the castle itself developed serious structural problems as early as the 1580s. Apparently no repairs were made; the Scottish Parlia-ment convened in the 94-foot-long Great Hall in 1585. Warnings were still being issued 20 years later. Two years after that, the north quarter collapsed, "rufe and all," according to the earl who doubled as palace caretaker and who notified Mary's son, King James I of England.

Linlithgow had its own chapel but Mary seems to have been christened next door, in St. Michael's Church. Historians have found no record of a service, but the Lord Treasurer authorized 54 shillings for white taffeta "to the Princess's baptism."

When Mary returned to Scotland from France in 1561, she landed at Leith, the port of Edinburgh. The next day, she and her entourage moved on to the palace of Holyrood, but they arrived early and the welcome was less exuberant than she had expected. For the rest of her reign, Holyrood, which adjoined the abbey where her father was buried, was Mary's main residence; it is still used by the royal family.

Mary's second-floor apartment in the thick-walled old wing, where she lived for six years, contained two main rooms and two smaller rooms. The suite is fancier now than it was in her day; a frieze in the large outer room, discovered 12 years ago, was not painted until James I's homecoming in 1617,

Mary married her second husband
Henry Stuart, Lord Darnley, in the palace
His manner offended the Scottish noble long before Mary and Darnley exchanges their wedding vows in 1565; the lords objected to the marriage, and Mary spen south of the honeymoon riding abour Scotland defending her husband.

Mary changed her mind about Darnley within 18 months, after he and fellow nobles committed a murder fewer than 50 steps from her chamber. The killing is described in a letter from Charles IX of France that is on display at Holyrood. In Mary's time, the palace was larger than it is now. The round tower that con-tains her quarters, which was commis-sioned by James IV in the early 1500s, was enclosed by a large inner court and a smaller back court. Sixteenth century renovations led to the removal of the stone vaniting on the ground floor and the repositioning of the two upper floors.

Less has been changed at the more ausre Edinburgh Castle, at the opposite of Edinburgh's Royal Mile, which was the city's main street in Mary's day. The castle still dominates Edinburgh. Inside the thick stone walls of the castle is the huge cannor known as Mons Meg, which 15th-century Scots boasted could fire a cannonball a mile and a half.

What was once the medieval royal palace was remodeled for Mary and Darnley and above one of the doors is the date 1566, with the initials MAH, for Mary and Henry, Darnley's first name. Fifty year later the carpenters and stonemasons were called for another refurbishing in preparation for the homecoming from England of Mary's son, James VI of Scotland who succeeded to the English throne as James i in 1603. James was born in the castle at a time when it was more a military and politica symbol than a royal residence and Mary may have decided to deliver James there to strengthen his chances of succeeding to the Scottish throne and to the English throne as well. Mary's labor was prolonged, and before James was born, a countess who practiced witchcraft was called to the deivery room. The countess began performing rituals intended to transfer Mary's labor pains to a noblewoman lying on a bed nearby.

On the paneled walls of the crown room are Mary's coats of arms as the Dauphine of France, the Queen of France and "asserting also to be Oueen of England," and in the queen's chamber is a plaster cast from Mary's tomb. James's portrait hange over the fireplace, his helmet at his side.

Like a growing number of German chefs, Schassberger is being drawn to what is called grandmother's kitchen, a revival or reinterpretation of prewar regional German cuisine. His version is part Grossmutter, part Roman-style and much Schassberger.

The wicker basket of herbs later turned into a salad sprinkled with red and orange nasturtiums with pink, lavender and white comflower petals, Ginsebilimchen (mutty, inch-tall daisies), and hints of mint and wild oregano. It was tossed in a vinaigrette of hazelmut oil and wild strawberry vinegar.

His menu includes a grilled wild chicken with a foamy sauce of wild sorrel; salmon with lemony thyme; pork medallions with thin, white slices of Steinpitzen (ccpcs).

Schassberger's dishes are delicate and subtle. "I do not want to bury the flavor of a dish in herbs," he said. "Some kitchens season heavily before the guests arrive. I wait with my chopped herbs here"—he patted the company of the last seconds. This

The magazine Feinschmecker, meaning gournet, called him "the cook who sits in the nettles," and pictured him squatting in a vast field of green. ("Actually, it was a field of peppermint," Schassberger said.) "To sit in the nettles" is loosely the German equivalent of "out of the frying

Schassberger not only cooks with nettles, but on occasion nettles competitors, who complain that he is too much of a self-promoter. He has adopted a heraldic crest for his hotel with a chef's toque, a jug of rine, and a crossed knife and fork on a shield under an antiered buck. Forte: A Hotel Group In Search of An Image hat do Kentucky Fried Chicken outlets in Britain, Pan Am's inflight catering out of London, the TraveLodge chain of motels in the U.S., the Grosvenor House hotel in London the Ritz in Madrid and the Plaza Athenter hotels in Paris and New York have in common? All are operated by Trusthouse Forte PLC (THF), a British-based company, which with sales of £1.48 billion ($2.25 billion) in 1986 and pre-tax profits of £136 million, claims to be the largest, and arguably the most profitable, hotel and catering group in the world.

By Roger Collis

It may also be the most diversified. THF has 850 hotels in 30 countries (250 in Britain with 13 in central London and four at Heathrow Airport), from historic coaching inns to motor lodges and five-star city center properties. Catering interests range from fast food (Little Chef, Happy Eater chains and Kentucky Fried Chicken in Britain) to haute cuisine (Café Royal and Quaglino's restaurants in London) as well as motorway service areas, duty free shops, airport catering and flight kitchens serving 125 airlines.

We'll emerge with a luxury brand

Diversity has been a strength in financial terms, but a weakness in building an overall marketing strategy. While other hotel groups such as Hyatt, Sheraton, Marriott, Inter-Continental and Hilton have identifiable products and images, THF has little overall corporate recognition from the traveler.

As one insider says, "I think they have an identity crisis. There's a great debate at the moment as to whether the THF symbol should appear prominently in all their hotels. Certain hotels, like the Georges V in Paris and the Grosvenor House in London, don't want to be branded THF. It's the classic question, do you brand them or let them keep their separate identity."

"Being in so many different markets has its advantage in being able to weather eco-nomic storms," said Rocco Forte, THF's chief executive, who took over in 1983 from his father, Lord Charles Forte, 78. "The way the group is now is very much related to the way it developed, a great extent by acquisition. It's a concept that most of the U.S. companies are now taking up. They now have three of four strata of operation whereas they started with one. We've been there

"What we're now looking at," said Forte, 42, "is clearly defining each sector and branding them differently and getting that across to our customers. It's a very difficult problem. Our exclusive clientelle don't necessarily want to feel they're staying in a

""I think we'll eventually emerge with a huxury brand," Forte said, "Whether we ac-tually brand it or not is another matter. Then the next four-star category hotels [is] aimed at the business traveler, which will probably be called Forte. Then we have TraveLodge as a separate brand which we're working on in the States and might take into Europe. In the next couple of months we'll have a defi-nite concept."

In Britain, THF has a third group of provincial city-center botels and Post Houses, moderately priced three and fourstar hotels at key junctions outside city cen-ters, easily accessible by car and ideal for meetings. There are Little Chef Lodges that provide budget accomodation for motorists. These are near Little Chef restaurants. A single room with bath and TV is £19 (£24 for a double). "We are building about 40 a year and expect to have 100 by 1990," Forte said.

"We understand the advantages and disadvantages of branding," said Bob Rouse, sales and marketing director of THF's hotels division. "The consumer is split between wanting to know what he's getting and sameness everywhere. It is a delicate balance. The issue is finding something which makes a general statement about the product and then allows things to build on top. For exam-ple our 'Leisure Breaks,' which is a minimum two nights, one of which has to be Saturday and half-board, is going to be different at the Black Swan at Helmsley from Manchester Grand Hotel."

One thing that sets THF apart from its competitors is that it owns most of its hotels and has few management contracts. Forte said, "That's how we've been built up from the old Trust Houses which go back 70-80 years [THF emerged from a merger of Forte and Trust Houses in 1970]. "If you're expanding rapidly with hotels today," he said, "it's impossible to do it owning the property, so most of the U.S. companies have gone for contracts. The most important thing for them has always been to go for representa-tion in a city, which is all very well, but the profits of most U.S. hotel groups aren't very high. We're in business to make money by ingit. We re in business to make money by giving our customers what they want and there's no point just rushing around opening hotels left, right and center. Yes, it does help if you've got widespread representation. Yes, it does help if you've got sales offices and reservations systems around the world. But a lot of individual hotels succeed without all these things. What we want is longer term

A Revival for Venetian Maskmaking

by Annasue McCleave Wilson

in his shop.

T ENICE - This is a city of mystery and intrigue, characteristics no bet-ter symbolized than in the Carnival mask, the crafting and wearing of which have been reborn in the last six years along with the public celebration of Carnival itself. Mercantile spirit never flagging, Venice catches the eye of the visitor by displaying these masks for sale at every opportunity. The wearing of the beauta, or mask, in Venice is of disputed origin. Some say the tradition was brought back with spices from tradition was brought back with spices from the east, where women covered their faces in public. The word may derive from the German behuten, to protect.

The whole Carnival costume is a shroud of deception and singular to Venice. The 18thcentury mask was white, made of leather or carta pesta (papier-māchė), similar to the classic theater mask. This was enfolded in a cape (tabarro) with a black hood and topped with a tricorn hat. This costume was worn by men and women alike during periods of Carnival, which at one time was celebrated for up to six months of the year. Everyone from doge to kitchen maid wore a disguise as Casanova was overheard to say, "prince with subject, the ordinary with the remarkable man, the lovely and hideous together." Each of the disguised was referred to as Sior Maschera and license of every conceivable kind was the order of the day.

Today, the celebrations are confined to the 11 days before Lent, which this year begins on March 4. Public celebrations, which under Mussolini ceased altogether and which for a time were held on the island of Burano, have been animated from the Piazza San Marco since 1980 and reach just about every corner of Venice. Modern masks copy the patricians' bautta or depict the racters of commedia dell'arte: Among the cast are Pantalone and Il Dottore, both old and foolish; Arlecchino and Brighella, two servant buffoons; and the braggadocio Capitano Spavento. With the revival of the celebration has come the renewed craft of fashioning the masks, and because the modern celebration is still relatively young, so, too, are a number of the artisans.

One such young craftsman can be found near Campo San Barnaba, where the impovnear Campo san barnaoa, where the impoverished nobles of the 18th century — called barnabotti — lived and congregated. Mario Belloni and his colleague Carolina Vicente run a workshop at Calle de la Boteghe, Dorsoduro 3172. Their workshop with its low-beamed ceiling and whitewashed walls also serves as a shop.

In the window is often a large gray mass of clay in the form of the sun god, or perhaps the moon goddess, awaiting plaster casts. Belloni and Vicente make both carta pesta and leather masks, doing all of the work themselves. Although Belloni is keeping some of the techniques for making leather masks a secret (he does carve a wooden mold) in order to keep prices lower than the competition (about $30 each as opposed to more than $50 elsewhere), he works the carta pesta masks rapidly in full view of prospec-tive buyers. Wet clay is molded to form a positive mask design. A plaster cast is then placed over the clay to form a negative shell, within which the layers of paper and glue are built up to form the mask. They are then sanded and painted white.

Belloni has developed his own technique using carta incollata — a different paper here, a different glue mixture there — and takes a progressive view of his art, suggesting that the craft has truly come back to life rather than simply taken on an amusement park character. Belloni can be found in the workshop even on Sundays. Opening times for the shop vary, but if the steel awning is shut in the afternoon, Belloni is usually to be found in one or another of the small cases on the campo. His plain leather masks cost about $30, the various carta pesta commedia dell'arte masks cost about $23. More elaborately painted and decorated masks cost from about $31 to $72.

Three other workshops stand out among the many now making and selling Carnival masks. The Laboratorio Artigiano Maschere of Giorgio Cianetti (Barbaria de le Tole, Castello 6657) is a dark workshop where a dusty window gives only the murkiest indi-cation of its magical interior. Although the reception area is dimly lit, it is possible to pick out plain carta pesta commedia dell'arte masks costing from $15 to $23 or less tradi-tional prettified ones costing from $38 to $53. The workshop next door faces the street and through the clouded window, you can watch the masks coming alive.

Emilio Massaro, just off the Calle del

Fruttarol (Calle Vitturi, Campo San Stafano. Fruttarol (Calle Vitturi, Campo San Safano, San Marco 2934) supplies many of the retail shops now selling masks in Venice, as do Belloni and Clanetti. You make your way through sawdust, wood shavings, bits of plaster and gauzy paper to where a woman paints a pair of spectacles on Il Dofters or a man sands Arleccino's face to the smooth ness of skin. Carta pesta commedia dell'arte masks here range from about $27 to $38. Splendid gilded masks are also crafted by Massaro and his studio; they cost from about $92 to $99.

The gilder Giovanni Cavalier on Campo San Stefano (2863A) also crafts gilded masks carved from wood, and it is worth a trip to his shop if only to admire his gilded frames and his restoration work on carved 18thentury pieces. He says that from the smallest mask to the largest frame, the process takes no fewer than 32 stops, using ingredients ranging from the finest fish glue to red clay mixed with egg. A gilded wooden mask costs about $107. His daughter makes carts pesta masks selling for about $27.

Masks are not the easiest souvenir to pack - although the leather ones are pliable, the carta pesta type are not immune to cracks. Like Murano glass and Burano lace, however, masks make beautiful, authentic and historic mementos of the Screnissima, Perhaps it is best to wear them home.

Many of the other castles that Mary knew no longer exist. Fotheringhay, in Northamptonshire, where she was executed, was levcicd. And much of what she saw on her 1563 progress to Dunure Castle has also been destroyed. Later the Earl of Cassillis roasted an abbot in hot soap to force the surrender of the abbcy.

The landmarks associated with her travels in 1566 have fared better. One is the town of Jedburgh, about an hour's drive southeast from Edinburgh. The queen was ailing when she arrived there to preside over a Circuit Court. Her headquarters were in a three-story stone building with a small circular tower and a carved wooden door. Mary is said to have chosen it as her headquarters because it was the first building in Jedburgh with indoor sanitation. The building, which is open to tourists during the spring, summer and fall, is being refurbished for the anniversary fes-

While riding to Jedburgh, Mary received word that her third husband, Lord Bothwell, had been wounded in a skirmish. Five days ater, when she heard he was recovering she decided to visit him. She rode 50 miles to his fortress at Her-mitage Castle, near the English border, and spent an hour or two with the recuperating soldier. But because the Flermitage could not handle overnight guests, Mary headed back to Jedburgh. Her health had been poor since the Mary birth of her son, and the trip was gates. too much for her. She began to have convulsions and soon sent for her lords to tell them her last wishes, but she recovered Mary was fond of Dunfermine Abbey, in the town that had been the capital of Scotland in the Mid-dle Ages. Today the abbey is in ruins. Its replacement is a cathedral with the word KING in the tower.

Mary was imprisoned in 1567 at Loch Leven Castle, near Kinross, on a seven square-mile (18 square-kilometer) island about two hours from Edinburgh. In Mary's day the island was smaller and the loch larger; today Loch Leven is a nature reserve. Mary was held there for the first 11 months of her imprisoument, and suffered a miscarriage during that time. She was ent off from contact with the outside world; by some accounts her jailer spoke only once, to tell her that bonfires blazing in the distance celchrated the coronation of James VI. She escaped by walking through the open courtyard with a co-conspirator. Hoping to visit her cousin, Queen Elizabeth, and win a pardon, Mary fled to England. She set sail in a skiff but changed her mind, deciding she wanted to go to France instead. Winds and tides, however, propelled her to England anyway. She never saw Elizabeth For the next 19 years she was kept in custody, much of the time under the supervision of the Earl of Shrewsbury. His jealous wife, Bess of Hardwick, accused him of leniency toward the prisoner. Bess was upset that the earl allowed Mary to exercise outside the castle

The Long Shadow Of a Tudor Axe

by A.L. Rowse

OUR hundred years ago, on Feb. 8, 1587, was enacted that last tragic scene, when Mary Stuart's head fell to the executioner, and the reverberations of the act have gone on ever since. Not only in history and biography, but also in the arts and letters, in novels, poems, plays, in opera as well as in paintings and epictions and in films

The career of Mary Queen of Scots, with all its changes, escapades and escapes, flights and imprisonments — most of all her execution at Fotheringhay in Northamptonshire strikes across the history of Scotland and England and, to a lesser extent, of France, in her age and time. So far as England was concerned it marked decisively and luridly the beginning of the 20-year-long war with Spain. There was to be no compromise, no turning back.

Her personality and the events of her career are among the most dramatic in all history. They are also among the most controversial, for her course in life lay across a minefield. The field is cluttered with partisans for and against, and most people's judgments about Mary Stuart are personal and emotional. However, to get it right, one has to see it impartially in terms of politics. That is what it was all about, for she was a key figure on the chessboard.

Her world of the 16th century was rather comparable to ours of the 20th century, in that it was split ideologically from top to bottom by the conflict between Reformation and Counter-Reformation, just as our time has been riven between communism and democracy. In her lifetime the conflict heated up into political assassinations and massacres, like the St. Bartholomew's Day massacre in France in 1572; in civil and religious wars over half of Europe, culminating in Spain's long wars in the Netherlands and with England

Mary Stuart came to take a hand in it passionately and recklessly in accordance with her temperament. The clue to her is that she was a Frenchwoman - three-quarters by birth and wholly by education and training. Born at Linhthgow in 1548 she was spirited away to France as a child of 5 by the Catholic party in Scotland, to keep her out of the hands of the Protestant English.

These wanted her married to the young prince, later Edward VI, and subordinate Scotland to England. It would have saved a great deal of trouble if that could have come about. Instead, she was educated in France with the French royal children, and eventually married to the boy-king, Francis II. Under the marriage agreement, if there were no heirs Scotland was to become the gift of the French crown — a French dependency, and French troops occupying Edinburgh at England's back door when she was at war

In 1558 Elizabeth I came to the English throne with a slur upon her legitimacy. There was no doubt about Mary Swart's, and she was a great-granddaughter of Henry VII. She put forward her right to the English throne, and would never give up her claim to the succession — though no one in the En-glish government wanted her. She was re-garded as a foreigner, above all a French-woman, when the French were usually England's enemies.

So there was bound to be jealousy and suspicion between Elizabeth, nine years her senior, and Mary, especially when her hus-band died, and Mary came back to Scotland, a very eligible 18-year-old widow of immense vitality and ambition.

The cine to Elizabeth's success was that she governed in accordance with the consensus of the country, that is of the governing class, on the agreed basis of moderate Protestantism. Mary's situation in Scotland was far more difficult, for she was a convinced Catholic, and the Scottish Reformation had taken the more extreme form of Genevan Calvinism. Mary's uncles in France - they were cardinals — were leaders of the Counter-Reformation and privately she assured them and the Pope that she meant to bring Scotland back to Catholicism, This was politically an impossible aim, for the Scottish nobles had got the lands of the church and were not giving them up.

For the first few years Mary ruled moderately, with the advice of her (illegitimate) half-brother, John Stuart, a Protestant and first Earl of Moray. But her real intentions came out with her determination to marry Lord Darnley, for he was a Catholic, and of both Tudor and Stnart royal blood.

This was a challenge indeed to Elizabeth, with both Mary and Damley's claims to her throne, Elizabeth tried to stop the marriage. She even offered Mary her own prime favor-than uscless — he preferred the grooms of Holyrood to his wife, the Queen. It was worse than humiliating, for he com-bined with her enemies to murder her Italian secretary, Riccio, practically in her presence, when she was carrying the child who was to become James VI of Scotland and James 1 of England. Darnley was next murdered when Kirk o'Field, a house on the outskirts of Edinburgh, was blown up with gunpowder.

turned out fatally — really the poor woman had no luck. Elizabeth had all the luck in oot marrying, keeping all the menfolk at arm's length and maintaining order in the oursery. Mary simply couldn't: Everything got out of control, herself included. Darnley was worse

These events made a prodigious scandal, but what shocked all Europe—including the Pope, Philip of Spain, Elizabeth—Catholics as well as Protestants, was that Mary proceeded to marry the Earl of Bothwell, the man whom everybody knew to be responsi-ble for her husband's murder, And with indecent haste - she got him divorced from his wife, and then married him in a Protestant ceremony. It was her determination to stick to Bothwell that ultimately ruined her. But the country was up in arms, the lords in rebellion. When she was captured and brought back to Edinburgh, the good citizens greeted her with "Burn the whore!"

She had reason for desperate haste, for it seems that she was pregnant by him, and that, imprisoned in Loch Leven Castle, on an island in the lake, she had a miscarriage.

She later escaped from the castle and took one more gamble - only to be routed in a battle at Langaide, near Glasgow. A force of her supporters was defeated by an anti-Catholic group, the Lords of the Congregation, who favored her son. From that defeat she made yet another mistake of judgment and, instead of taking refuge in France and waiting things out, she crossed the Solway Firth into England, hoping that Elizabeth would put her back on her throne.

Holyrood Palace, residence of the Queen of Scots, and Elizabeth I's signature on Mary's death warrant.

Elizabeth's personal inclination was to restore her upon conditions, for her own deepest conviction was the common trade union interest of monarchs to keep their subjects in subjection. But the Scots in power - Mary's half-brother Moray was made regent would never have her back.

Mary's presence in England created an almighty problem for Elizabeth, for oow her own Catholic opponents, especially in the north, had an alternative candidate for her throne. Elizabeth would not marry: That left the succession open. Mary entered into a plot to fill the gap — she would marry Elizabeth's cousin, the Duke of Norfolk.

This would have been fatal for Elizabeth; She said that within a month of such a marriage she would be inside the Tower, She warned Norfolk - "Look to your pillow!" reminding him of Damley's fate. Norfolk gave her his promise to remain loyal and oot to marry - and then broke it.

Mary and he entered upon the dangerous course of international intrigue to force the issue - the Ridolfi Plot to get papal support and cash for a rising in the north, intervention by the Duke of Alba from the Netherlands. The Rising of the Northern Earls, the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland, was precipitated too early in 1569, and was quashed. The Pope excommunicated Elizabeth and issued a Bull of Deposition, absolving her subjects from their allegiance.
This crisis, which lasted from 1569 to 1572, was the greatest of Elizabeth's reign.
At its end Parliament called for the execution of Mary and Norfolk. Elizabeth would not consent to the former, but was forced to agree to Norfolk's execution. After that, for the next 15 years, Mary's life in confinement in England was in the nature of an anticlimax. She had lost cootrol of her own fate, but did not give up hope, forever spinning schemes and fantasies for her own restora-

Mary and her large entourage — she kept up semi-royal state — were moved from one palatial residence to another, always away from the coast, in case of attempted flight. In those days of no running water, every great mansion with a hundred or more occupants needed to be evacuated and fumigated after a couple of months. At one time of political danger she was moved to Coventry, the midpoint of the country. She complained of the damp and cold of Wingfield in Suffolk and Tutbury Castle in Staffordshire, and seems tion and plots against Elizabeth.

Chatsworth. She hunted in the forests and had a coach to ride in the parks. But the government kept a close watch on her and her plots. In 1586 a rich young to have been least discontented at Chatsworth, in Derbyshire, the new and up-to-date Elizabethan mansion, which was later pulled down to make way for the present

Catholie hothead, Anthony Babington glamorized by Mary, formed a plot for kill-ing Elizabeth. By this time both those royal ladies would have been glad of the other's death. Mary gave her consent to it in writing, and was caught red-handed. She was brought to trial. Of course she denied everything and also the validity of any court bringing her, a queen, to trial, and in a foreign country. But the government could take oo more risk with her. England was at war with Spain - in 1587 the Armada was being prepared and next year would sail. If the Armada were to land an army, Spain would have a conve-nient candidate for the throne, and Mary made a will leaving her rights to it to Philip

By the time the Armada was ready, Mary's head was off, in that last magnificent, tragic scene at Fotheringhay. She carried herself with royal courage and dignity to the last, holding a crucifix and putting herself across as a martyr for the Catholic faith.

It made a terrible blot on Elizabeth's scutcheon, as she knew it would: her assent to it was wrung from her - it gave her something like a nervous breakdown.

A Good Punch Is 'Voluptuous'

by Mark Kurlansky

ORT DE FRANCE, Martinique — "It is something voluntuous to drink a punch, a good punch," said Robert Rose-Rosette, octogenarian sage of Martinique, veterinarian by trade, expert on history's most famous Martiniquaise, Josephine de Bean-harnais, and self-styled philosopher of rum punch.

e Peebles

Jedburgh •

There are few things more Caribbean than rum punch and someone who knows his islands could tell where he was with his eyes closed by ordering a rum punch and tasting it.

The word punch comes from the Hindu word pac, which means five. In India a punch, as the British called it, was tea, lemon, cinnamon, sugar and alcohol. In Martinique punch has only three ingredients - sugar,

When you order a punch here you are given a bottle of rum, a small glass with a slice of lime and either a carafe of cane syrup or a bowl of crystal sugar. Each applies his own techniques, some with fork, some with spoon, crushing and squeezing the lime, dissolving the sugar.

"No two people make punch the same. You can sit together and enjoy your differences," said Rose-Rosette. He can barely disguise his disdain for the neighboring Guadeloupians. There the punch is generally served

Rose-Rosette is so serious about punch that he has for the second year organized an international symposium on rum punch. He said the first drew about 250 people. This year he was down to little more than 100 participants, mostly French and Martiniquais. Still they ended with a lively one-hour discussion, lending credence to the claim that the French can debate anything. The people here have always been serious about rum punch. Numerous poems have been written to it both in French and Creole and in the 1930s a book called "La Cuite sublime" (The Sublime Binge), was published.

On Martinique, only a few stray from orthodoxy. Some add honey instead of sugar. While most drink the 110-proof local white rum, a few prefer the fine dark Martiniquais rum.

Most other islands are less purist. In the eastern Caribbean, where nutneg is an important crop, rum punches almost always have grated nutneg on the top. It is freshly grated, the bartender keeping a small spice grater as a standard tool of his trade.

In Grenada, where nutmeg is the leading export product, the recipe at the bar of the Ramada Renaissance (formerly the Grenada Beach Hotel, Cuban headquarters, then the U.S. Marine barracks), is one ounce of gold rum, one ounce dark rum, one ounce fresh lime juice, two ounces sugar syrup, bitters and mameg. This is the basic eastern Caribbean recipe. Sometimes granadine is added for color.

On some islands things get more elaborate. About an hour of prying loosened the outline of a formula from Ti Pierre, the bartender at the Castel Haiti Hotel in Port-an-Prince. He adds orange juice to the recipe and, his big secret, papaya juice.

But one of the reasons the punches are so good in Haiti is Barbancourt rum, always dark and the only rum in the country. It is possibly the ideal rum for punches, although Jamaicans will argue for Appleton's gold, the Martiniqueis for La Mauny white and Barbadans for Cockspur. All sound arguments.

In Dominica, locals drink so-called casque rum, sold by the glass ont of the barrel. Dominicans also have a passion for fresh fruit juices. Fresh juices such as gnava, passion fruit, lime and coconut are sold in bars,

The combination of these juices and casque rum makes this island a natural laboratory for rum punch research. Equal parts of guava, passion fruit and lime juice are one successful blend. Khalil Azar, a Syrian farmer and businessman who has lived for 18 years on the island, has arrived at his own recipe based on the products of his farm. He mixes grapefruit juice, passion fruit, lime juice and tangerine with an equal quantity of rum, sweetens with honey and grates cardamom on the top. Why cardamom? "I don't grow outneg," he explained.

The trick to all of these mixed punches is to make sure there is a large quantity of good rum. But of course, to the Martiniquais, bottle and spoon m hand, the rest of these punches are for philistines.

New Scandal Hits French University

The University of Nantes, which aroused an uproar last May by accepting a doctoral thesis claiming that Nazi gas chambers may not have existed, is again at the center of a controversy.

Following the student protest and a subsequent request from the Education Ministry, the committee said it had post-poned its decision on Mr. Delaporte to a "later date that has yet to be set."

TECHNOLOGY

A Brighter Day Is Coming For Solar Power Technology

By SCOTT BRONSTEIN

New York Times Service

EW YORK — Even though the hreakthrough is still some years away, new solar technologies are beginning to move out of the laboratory and into commercial application. Companies are finding ways to cut the cost and increase the production of photovoltaie panels, hastening the day when solar power will be practical on a large scale. The City of Austin Electric Utility recently installed its first solar station, a $3 million, 300-kilowatt photovoltaie plant designed to provide enough extra electricity during neak hours to signed to provide enough extra electricity during peak hours to power 100 to 200 homes,

The electricity it produces costs $9 a watt, about twice the cost

the sun may be of energy generated by coal, gas, oil or even ouclear power plants. Yet officials of the Texas city's utility say the new facility was a wise investment that will familiarize them with solar power systems, which they believe will play an important role in the city's power needs in a few years.

cost-competitive by 1990. "Photovoltaic solar energy has a chance, in fact a high proba-

"Photovoltaic solar energy has a chance, in fact a high probability, of becoming cost-effective at $2 to $3 per watt," said John Et Hoffner, manager for alternative energy at the Austin utility. That time is rapidly approaching, according to Zoltan J. Kiss, president of Chronar Corp. of Princeton. New Jersey, a manufacturer of photovoltaic hardware and systems. "In 1990 we will be able to install a solar power station between $2.50 and $3 per matter and at that point photocoltairs are certainly cost-competitive." watt, and at that point photovoltaics are certainly cost-competerive with any other way of making electricity." Mr. Kiss said.

Although federal funding has been cut to $43 million a year, from $150 million in 1980, immense progress has been made in photovoltaic research through the combined efforts of private industry, universities and Department of Energy programs like the one at Colorado's Solar Energy Research Institute. uf3INTEREST in photovoltaics is especially high in rural and temote areas of countries where electrical needs are rising, but where it is often impractical to extend the power grid. It is already common to find photovoltaic cells at work in remote areas as independent power sources for communications systems or as replacements for diesel and gasoline generators used to pump water or refrigerate food and medicine In the coming year we'll see a large increase in the number of photovoltaic applications for a small source of power where an electric connection cable would be more hassle than it's worth," said Charles F. Gay, vice president of research and development at ARCO Solar Inc. of Chatsworth, California, For example, he said, solar cells might be used to recharge the batteries of cordless drills, saws and other power hand tools.

Despite the higher current cost of solar energy, utilities are attracted to photovoltaics because they have oo turbines or other moving parts, so maintenance is minimal; they are noopolluting. silent, and can be operated unattended. A computer "awakens them" when the sun comes up and turns them off when the sun goes down or behind a cloud. Above all, the fuel source is cheap and plentiful.

Photovoltaic cells are semiconductor devices that convert light energy to direct-current electricity. A typical cell has two semiconductor layers. Sunlight passes through one layer and is reflected back and forth, dislodging electrons to create a current.

Photovoltaic cells in the form of solar panels have long been used to generate electricity for space stations and satellites, but the technology has been too expensive - initially nearly $1,000 per watt, now down to about $9 - to use effectively on Earth. One way to reduce the expense is to make the solar panels thinner, thus cutting the raw product and manufacturing costs. Indeed, some of the most interesting advances in solar cell technology are being made in an area called thin film. "Thin films can absorb sunlight in a thickness that is 100 times less than previous technology," said Kenneth Zweibel, manager

Pennzoil Ruling Is Upheld

Texas Rejects Texaco's Appeal

HOUSTON - A Texas state appeals court confirmed Thursday a unanimous jury ruling that Texaco Inc. illegally interfered with Penn-zoll Co.'s planned takeover of Getty Oil Co. But the appeals court slightly reduced the record $11.1 billion damages award.

The court reduced by $2 billion the $3 billion in punitive damages that a lower court had awarded to Pennzoil, a court clerk said. Otherwise, the judgment was affirmed.

The decision was separate from an appeal pending before the U.S. Supreme Court on whether Texaco should have to post a $12 billion bond while appealing the decision in the Texas courts.

It was not immediately certain whether Texaco could appeal Thursday's decision.

Today's decision continues to support an outrageous judgment totally at odds with both the law and the facts surrounding Texaco's acquisition of Getty Oil in 1984," Texaco's chief executive, James Kinnear, said Thursday.

Pennzoil sued after Texaco reached an agreement to acquire Getty in January 1984. Pennzoil argoed that Texaco's actioo breached Pennzoil's previous, veroal agreement to merge with Getty.

A Houston jury found in Penn-zoil's favor in November 1985, and and ordered Texaco to pay $10.53 billion in damages. The judgment was the largest in U.S. history.

State District Judge Solomom Casseb Jr. upheld the damage award, added another $600 million in interest, and said interest would accrue at a rate of 10 percent a year.

In July, Texaco asked the state appeals court to set aside the No-vember judgment. Under Texas law, Texaco had to post a $12 billion bond. But a federal court in White Plains, New York, where Texaco is based, said a $1 billion bond was sufficient.

For Saudis, Moderation in All Things A Spendthrift Economy Adjusts to Falling Oil Revenue

By Peter T. Kilborn

New York Times Service RIYADH — Early in the 980s, when Saudi Arabia was riding the oil boom, stories circulated about Saudis who traded in their cars when the ashtray filled up. Today, however, many cars on the roads of Riyadh lonk three, four and five years old.

"I always get a good feeling when I see a young Saudi buying a used car," said the deputy min-ister of commerce, Abdul Rah-man Zamil. "People are much more careful with their money.

The proliferation of used cars is symbolic of the post-boom economy that has emerged in Sandi Arabia, After four years of weak oil revenues, the kingdom, whose profligacy had become al-most comical, has retreated to caution and relative restraint.

From the early 1970s to the early 1980s, bulging coffers from oil sales permitted the Saudis to huild a sophisticated system of schools, roads and factories, But now, the growth has stalled, and in a new and humbled ecocomy, government spending is being stretched out and cut back, from $50 billion in 1981 to less than $20 billion this year.

Builders complain of interminable delays in the government's payments. The work forces of many businesses and government ageneies have been chopped by 25 percent or more. Bankruptcies have soared, and banks have sharply cut their lending because of Islamic laws that the courts are citing more and more in excusing borrowers from paying interest.

For all that, Saudi Arabia is no

Bangladesh. Abject poverty is negligible because the Sandis export much of the problem before it arises. Most laborers are immi-grants who work on contract. When their jobs go, their em-ployers are required by law to give them a ticket home. No one gets unemployment benefits although anyone can visit King Fahd or his princes and ask for some money, which is given on

Nevertheless, hy many standard economic measures. Saudi Arabia seems hard pressed. Gross domestic product — the total value of goods and services. excluding income from foreign investments — was only $70 bil-lion last year, less than half the 1981 figure. Government reve-ones from oil exports have dropped to an estimated $19 billion for the year that ends in March, from five times as much at the start of the 1980s, and the government expects little growth for the rest of 1987. Partly as a result, the kingdom's budget deficit, about $13 billion a year for the last three years and likely to remain as much this year, is almost four times the huge U.S. deficit, in relation to the total economy. But this is oot a conventional economy. If Saudi Arabia has budget deficits, like most nations, it has no national debt, unlike most. In the oil boom years, the Saudis amassed a hoard of petrodollar reserves, ernment securities. The kingdom draws opoothese instead of borrowing or raising taxes. Saudi banking authorities say the reserves have dropped from a peak of $140

The Commerce Department said goods were virtually unchanged at retail sales totaled a seasonally adjusted $119.3 billion last month. It also revised the December in the percent gain in December. also revised the December increase, originally reported at 4.4 percent, January's decrease was the largest since 1967, when the government began compiling the data. The previous record, a 5.2 percent decline, was set in October. Virtually all of the January drop resulted from a 22.4 percent decline in car sales, which most analysts had been expecting. Auto sales jumped 16.1 percent in December as customers went on a spree ahead of Jan. I tax-law changes.

Excluding autos, sales were virtually unchanged in January, declining 0.1 percent after rising 1.1 percent in December. The new tax code that took effect on Jan. 1 climinated sales tax as a deduction. The change prompted thousands of consumers to make purchases in December that they might otherwise have delayed. American automakers reported last week that their January sales were down 32.7 percent compared with January a year ago. The White House spokesman,

Marlin Fitzwater, pointed to the car-sales figure and said the overall figure showed oo fundamental problem with the economy. "Virtually all of the economy's vital signs point to a healthy 1987,"

Independent economists agreed in differing degrees. Michael K. Evans of Evans Econometrics Inc. described himself as "cautiously pessimistic" about the numbers.

"Ohviously, the figures are oot as had they seem at face value," Mr. Evans said. With autos exclud-ed, he said, "it's not a disaster." "The underlying situation is ac-tually good," said David Wyss, chief financial economist for Data

Japan Says Trade Surplus Grew by 19%

TOKYO - Japan's seasonally adjusted merchandise-trade surplus grew 19 percent in January from a month earlier, adding to evidence that the turnaround in world trade imbalances is taking longer than was expected. The January surplus amounted to $8.45 billion after accounting for seasonal factors, compared with $7.09 billion in December, the Finance Ministry said Thursday. "Everybody keeps saying we've turned the corner on the Japanese surplus, but this number hardly gives a basis for that," said Nicholas Sargen, an economist for Salo-mon Brothers Inc, in New York. However, Mr. Sargen and other U.S. economists said they continue to believe that Japan's trade surplus will begin to shrink soon.

Before adjusting for seasonal factors, Japan's trade surplus actually fell to $4.29 billion in January from $8.70 hillion in December. The unadjusted figure for January 1986 was $1.88 billion.

However, economists said the hig reduction in the seasonally un-adjusted oumber was untrustwor-thy because Japan's exports typi-cally drop off drastically in January after a surge to complete shipments before Christmas and the end of

Norsk Hydro Reports a Loss Of $46.3 Million for 1986 By Juris Kaza

STOCKHOLM - Norsk Hydro AS, the Norwegian energy, fertilizer and metals group, reported Thursday that it had an after-tax loss of 324 million kroner ($46.3 million) in 1986 from a profit of 2.21 billion kroner in 1985. In the fourth quarter alone, Norsk Hydro posted a net loss of 857 million kroner, compared with Norsk Hydro said the 1986 results reflected "very difficult markets for fertilizers and the drop in oil prices." The industrial group, Norway's largest, indicated that decisions to absorb certain costs were also behind the losses.

Sales, including newly consolidated companies acquired during the year, rose 30 percent to 54.3 billion kroner from 41.9 billion kroner in 1985. Adjusted for the effects of acquisitions, sales rose 15 percent, Norsk Hydro said.

the company posted a fourth-quar-ter profit of 258 million kroner, ner a year earlier. The agricultural sector, responsible for fertilizers, posted an operating loss of 329 million kroner in the fourth quarter, down from earnings of 332 mil-For all of 1986, operating profits before taxes and financial items fell

Norsk Hydro said that among the costs absorbed in 1986 were 1.03 billion kroner in nonrecurring costs for restructuring in its fertilizer business and other areas.

The company said that plant closings in the fertilizer sector in West Germany, Britain and France had reduced costs by 200 million kroner and similar measures would cut costs by up to 1 billion kroner

Norsk Hydro also said it was about half for 1987, but noted that in 1986, it had to absorb the extra cost of a rapid reduction in exploration activity.

Merrill Lynch Sells Stake In a Hong Kong Company

HONG KONG — Merrill Lynch, the big U.S. brokerage, an-counced Wednesday that it had severed ties with one of Hong Kong's major financial companies, Sun Hung Kai, by selling its 25 percent share in the firm.

Stock analysts said the relationship had failed to produce the big profits expected.

Merrill Lynch did not say how much it received for the stake it bought in 1982 for more than 500 million Hong Kong dollars (about $65 million at current exchange rates). It did not trame the buyer but sources close to the transaction said it was a group of Hong Kong businessmen.

Merrill Lynch said in a statement: "While our relationship with Sun Hung Kai has been fruitful, we have determined that the financial markets have changed significantly since the time of our investment and both Sun Hung Kai and Merrill Lynch have agreed to develop our respective businesses independently."

Sun Hung Kai was founded by Fung King Hey, an entrepreneur who fled to Hong Kong from China in 1948. Mr. Fung, who died in 1985, made a fortune in the property boom of the 1960s and 1970s but saw his corporate empire teeter in 1983 after the market collapsed. Merrill Lynch was forced to pump cash into the company, which is still controlled by the Fung family, to save its investment.

Stock analysts said that Merrill Lynch had been looking to sever the link for some time and that the big rise in share prices in the last year had made a sale possible.

Dollar Up in New York, London

NEW YORK -- The dollar was higher Thursday, rebounding from a sharp sell-olf following the gov-ernment's report of a 5.8 percent decline in January retail sales. In New York, the dollar rose to 1.8295 Deutsche marks from 1.8195 on Wednesday; to 6.0915 French francs from 6.0590; to 1.5493 Swiss francs, from 1.5413; and to 154.00 yen from 153,95. The British pound edged down to $1.5177 from $1.5180. The retail sales announcement shook the market out of its early torpor and quickly pushed down the dollar more than I pfennig in European trading.

Contributing to the rising surplus was the strengthening of the Japanese yea. Although the higher yen makes Japanese goods more expensive abroad and has hurt sales, it also means that goods sold in yen take on a much higher dollar value in export calculations. The surplus with the United States was $3.28 billion, oot counting seasonal factors.

Overall, exports rose 16.2 percent from January 1986 to $14.86 billion, although they dropped 24.3 percent from December's level, Imports fell 3.1 percent from January 1986 to $10.57 billion.

the kingdom well into the 1990s.

And for all their hell-bent spending in the boom years, many Saudi citizens amassed savings, ton. "The private sector," said a consumer banker in Riyadh, "is probably the wealthiest you will ever see. Peo-ple's pockets are still full."

Signs are emerging that the econ-omy's new climate, for better or worse, is here to stay. Oil prices have held close to $18 a barrel since an agreement reached at a December meeting of the 13 members of the Organization of Petroleum Ex-porting Countries. In 1985, prices were around $30 a barrel.

Politically, Saudi Arabia's weaker economy creates some difficulty. The kingdom could afford to be generous with foreign aid when it was collecting nearly $100 billion annually in oil revenues, as in 1981.

Now it has become harder to ourture friendships with poorer neighbors. "They are defensive," an official of the Reagan administration said of Saudi government leaders. "They can't get other countries to hop anymore. In the past, they could give countries more in loans, subsidies and aid — protection money." For some the new conditions have brought a sense of relief. "I'm not sure I enjoyed the boom," said Suliman S. Olayan, an investor and chairman of the Olayan Group of People are building smaller and better-insulated houses, the con-tractors said, because costs are rising. For years, the government's electric utilities charged everyone a rock-bottom rate of 7 helala, or about 2 cents, per kilowatt-hour. The utilities kept the rate for occupants of small homes, but have raised it to 10 helala for mediumvolume users and to 15 for the biggest users. Extravagant perquisites have been fading away. Before, chair-men of stockholder-owned compa-nies routinely claimed 10 percent of profits for themselves. In the boom years, this meant a bonus of millioos of dollars. Profits have plunged since then, and the Finance Ministry has ordered that bonuses be limited to 100,000 riyals operations are based, has dropped from 31,000 in 1982 to 12,500. The biggest changes, however, have come in government spending for the roads, schools, industrial plants telecommunications cet-works, hospitale and other facilities that make up the kingdom's new economic foundation. Some public officials oow concede that some sectors were overbuilt. Saudi Arabia has financed farms to the extent that wheat can now be exported, but those subsidies have been reduced. And it has built steel, alumioum and petrochemical factories that have yet to prove themselves in world markets.

But even if mistakes were made, a developing nation became a developed one almost overnight.
"What Saudi Arabia spent during the last decade was huge, but we built a whole new country," said the finance minister, Mohammed Abalkhail. "Now we are going through a sort of adjustment stage."

Rapid development also had a political dimension. "We decided deputy commerce minister. The current cutbacks have produced a near-crisis in the government's relations with its contractors, domestic as well as foreign. In stretching out the completion schedules of the remaining megaprojects, the government has forced up contract costs. At the same time it is haggling over the contractors' appeals for higher fees. lo addition, some ministries have been tying up substantial payments because of disputes over minor details. U.S. companies say they have more than $1 billion involved in such disputes.

This, they say, is part of a government effort to slow spending and reduce the hudget deficits. The government approval process to begin payment can be laborious," an American contractor said. They can withhold 100 percent over a 1 percent issue. They're using their maximum leverage. The frustration piles up." The government, however, partly faults the contractors. "During the boom years, when the government, had 10 projects going, we were very flexible," Mr. Zamil said. "We'd accept anything. Payment was fast. With the decline of the projects, we pay more attention to quality. Government agencies and consultants start looking at things in more detail. These procedures take longer.

"And if the contractor causes a delay io a project," he added, "and is assessed the 10 percent penalty otipulated in the contract, he argues about the penalty,"
As part of the readjustment, Saudi Arabia is discouraging the kind of contracting that characterized the boom years — the recruitment of foreign cootractors. Nearly all such work now must be shared 50-50 with Saudis, primarily private businesses, which receive govern-

BOOK BRIEFS

OF PRISONS AND IDEAS, by Millovan Dillas, Translated from the Serbo-Croatian by Michael Boro Petrovich, Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1250 Sixth Avenne, San Diego, Calif. 92101.

Milovan Djilas is one of the last of the highranking ex-Partisans who fought in the mountains of Yugoalavia against the Germans. Disappointment in the rigidities of promised revolutionary change, after the relative inde-pendence of life in combat, led to the dismemberment of warrime dreams.

Through his writings, Djilas has continued to dream, fight on theoretically and survive in Belgrade. For speaking out, he has paid a heavy price. Until his expulsion from the Communist Party in 1954, he was a vice president of Yugoslavia and one of Tito's highest aides. Afterward, he served nine years in his wartime comrade's jails. Prison was not a new experience for him; in the 1930s he spent three years behind bars when Yugoslavia was ruled by a dictatorial monarchy. No matter who the turnkey, dungeons are dungeons, yet Djilas always managed to throw his words over the wall.

His latest book emphasizes that survival depends on faith in ideas — political and personal. "Perfect faith and perfect conviction constitute perfect innocence," he writes. "The half-hearted, the irresolute, the doubters have no place either in a cause or in prison." (Herbert Mitgang, NYT)

IT MIGHT AS WELL BE SPRING: A Musical Autobiography, by Margaret Whiting and Will Holt. William Morrow, 105 Madison Aveme, New York, N. Y. 10016.

The good news is that Margaret Whiting one of the best of the so-called "girl singers" who came to prominence in the late '30s and early '40s, has written her musical autobiography, a lively and interesting account; the bad news is that she has fleshed it out — and "fleshed" certainly is the word — with the story of her many marriages and love affairs, a story that she tells with refreshing self-mockery but at stupefying, in some instances embar rassing, length and detail.

Growing up in the fairyland that was Hollywood, surrounded by composers and musi-cians and movie stars, Whiting learned as little about the realities of life as about the realities of love. For six decades, she writes, she has

THE SECOND OLDEST PROFESSION:

Spies and Spying in the 20th Century, by Phillip Enightley. W. W. Norton & Co., 500 Fifth Ave-une, New York, N. Y. 10110.

The world's intelligence services, in the esti-mate of Phillip Knightley, are distinguished neither for intelligence nor service to their nations. Knightley, a British journalist whose last book was "The First Casualty," a history of war correspondents, once again covers a century of colorful activities, usually by offcolor types. Relying largely on anecdotes about espionage flops, some of which sound too bad to be true, he finds that boasts by former operatives have clocked dubious ac-

VERGIL IN AVERNO, by Avram Davidson. Doubleday, 245 Park Avenne, New York, N. Y.

In 1969 Avram Davidson published "The Phoenix and the Mirror," a rich and ornate novel that has become a small classic, and which inaugurated a sequence that "Vergil in Averno" continues. Like its predecessor, "Vergil in Averno" focuses on a half-legendary figure and period: the life and era of Vergil

Vergil was revered throughout the Dark

Ages as the greatest poet of the ancient world, a pious allegorist and foreteller of the birth of Christ. In the beginning of the 12th century, however, a series of legends arose portraying him as a magician or necromancer, and until the Renaissance the poet was as widely known for his fabulous feats — he is said to have built Naples upon three eggs, lived in a spinning castle, and erected in Rome a statue of a bronze horseman that would point its spear toward any province planning rebellion for the Acneid and the Eclogues. It is this never-existent world that Avram Davidson has taken as the setting for his series of novels, a world whose anachronisms, like the knights and tourneys of Chaucer's Trojan War, create a peculiar and complex beauty of their own. (Gregory Feeley, WP)

The opening bid does not have to be at the one-level: the idea is equally valid if a natural opening bid is made at the two- or three-level.

In the diagramed deal West tried this move over a strong two-bid but could not find a good fit. South naturally, reached five diamonds, which in normal circumstances would succeed. ·Unfortunately the defense was able to start with a club lead and a club ruff. Now it was a question of whether a spade loser could be avoided. South made a key play by few feet to the basket for a dunk.

Bill Hosket, who does television commentary for Ohio State, recalled watching the play with astornishment. "It was like picking an orange off of a tree," said Hosket, who formerly played for the New York Knicks of the National Basketball Association.

But Hosepan has been described components.

But Hopson has been dazzling opponents and spectators all this U.S. college basket-ball season. The 6-foot-5-inch (1.95-meter) senior forward, averaging 29 points a game, is among the top scorers in the nation; on Monday night he had 34 in leading the Buckeyes of the Big Ten Conference to a 90-22 rout of Michigan State, During and the firster this sense, he sensed 20 or more treich this season, he scored 30 or more (1) (1) (1) (1) Spoints in five consecutive games, including 36 during an 80-76 victory that handed topranked lows its first defeat of the season and 35 in a 75-73 loss to No. 4 Purdue.

"If you had to pick a player in the Big Ten right now who's playing the best, you've got to pick Dennis Hopson," said Doug Lee, who guarded him during Purdue's victory. But Hopson's considerable basketball gifts extend beyond his jump shot. He leads an admittedly short team in rebounding, with 8.6 a game. With the passing touch of a point guard, he is second among the Buckeyes in IS BOL BOUR lease, his coach, Gary Williams, said Hopson relishes the three-quarter trap press because

"the points are there if he can get the ball." Only a few years ago Hopson, doubtful of his own skills, had a lackadaisical practice style that drove his high school coaches to despair. But, since, his confidence has devel-... oped to the point where he matter-of-factly says: "When somebody guards me one-on-one, I basically can do what I want to do." In > because he's played against me for three years." He only recently has attracted widespread attention, partly because his team has an uninspiring 15-8 record and is 6-5 in the Big Ten. And although Hopson averaged 20.9 points a game last season, Ohio State's dominant player was Brad Sellers, the 7-foot forward drafted in the first round by the NBA's Chicago Bulls.

Now NRA scouts are all aware of Hopson, whom they predict will play shooting guard. Rick Sund, player personnel director of the Dallas Mavericks. : says Hopson is a "bona fide first-round prospect. He's ... got explosive quickness."

"He's a bock of an athlete," said Fred Taylor, who Coached Jerry Lucas and John Havlicek in the 1960s at Ohio State. "He has the innate ability to suspend himself when he goes up for a shot. If there's enough defensive pressure, be has the ability to wait for it to diminish. If not, he can change the delivery of his shot That's a God-given talent."

recalling the steal against Michigan State he said, "I think Darryl should have known better the baseline or prowling the perimeter. As a result, his production has soared.

Although Hopson insists he is consumed by the sport — "If I'm not playing, I'm always watching. Baskethall is always in my head" — there was a time when he didn't display much passion for it.

As a freshman at Bowsher High School in Toledo, Ohio, he skipped basketball, and a year later played junior varsity. He advanced to the varsity as a junior, but his coach, Dick Crowell, said Hopson was far more interested in getting a job and a car. "He'd say, Tm not sure I really want to play because I'm not sure it's worth it," Crowell said. An angry Crowell summoned Hopson to his office one November morning and told him he could become a great player by showing at least some effort. And, he issued an ultimatum: Work hard, or give up the sport. Hopson showed up for practice that afternoon and began channeling greater energy into his game. He averaged 21.1 points as a junior and 22.3 as a senior.

NHL Stars Beat Soviet With Seconds to Go

Lemieux-Poulin Goal Makes Score 4-3; Langway, Green Lead Sterling Defense

By Robert Fachet

Weshington Post Service
QUEBEC CITY — Dave Poulin
of the Philadelphia Flyers tipped in a shot by Mario Lemieux of the Pittsburgh Penguins with 75 seconds left before overtime Wednes-day night to give the National Hockey League all-stars a dramatic 4-3 victory over the Soviet Union's

The NHL players, who had practiced together only three times, turned in a surprisingly strong defensive performance in the first game of the two-game Rendez-Vous '87 series, limiting the Soviet Union to 24 shots and killing off four penalties, during which they allowed only one shot on goal.

The most prominent defender was Rod Langway of the Washing-ton Capitals, who played extensively, landed some solid checks on Ser-Makarov and Mikhail Varnakov and bore the brunt, with Rick Green of the Montreal Canadiens, of the Soviet power plays.
"I didn't realize we could play that good on defense," said Lang-way, whose mouth was cut when he was struck by the stick of Alexei Kasatonov. "We won because of our defense, and I mean the forwards, too. We played them from our blue line to their blue line very well and we had enough speed so our for-wards stayed with their forwards." Poulin Kevin Dineen of the Hartford Whalers and numerous centers were pitted against the powerful "KLM Line" of Vladimir Krutov, Igor Larionov and Makarov. The checkers produced two coals, including the winner, to one for the KLM, scored by defenseman Kasatonov on a freak bonnce.

On the game-winner, Poulin broke for the net as Lemieux drifted to the right, taking defenseman Viacheslav Fetisov with him. When Le-mieux shot, Poulin was blocking the view of goalie Evgeny Belosheykin and the deflection was a big bonus. "Mario carries the puck so well from left to right that I tried to get a piece of both defensemen," Fetisov and Kasatonov, "to give him as much room as I could," Poulin said. "Usually when you do that, you take yourself out of the play, but I popped through the middle.

"I was going for the net, looking for a rebound. I was expecting him to shoot and I saw the play over my shoulder and managed to deflect it. I think the goaltender was watchmg Mario."

The Soviet players protested that the play was offside, then admitted that they were unfamiliar with the new NHL rule that washes out a delayed offside if everyone clears the zone. The game was played under NHL rules with a Soviet referee, Nikolai Morosov Lemieux, who has been bothered by a knee injury, was used sparingly in the game. "It was tough," he said. "I missed a few shifts and it's hard to come back after you sit on the bench. You lose your legs. I was fortunate to come back late in the game and make a big play."

Although the Soviet Union routinely refuses to lift its goaltender when trailing late in a game, it when trailing late in a game, it away and finally succeeded with almost managed to create a last-minute tie. Some dazzling passes by made the headmen pass to Anatoli Larionov and Fetisov left Krutov open in front of the net, with goalie Grant Fuhr of the Edmonton Oilers out of position. But Krutov's shot hit the side of the net.

The NHL never trailed, building a 2-0 lead over the first 38 minutes on goals by Jari Kurri and Glenn Anderson of Edmonton, After the Soviet Union caught up on goals by Kasatonov and Viacheslav Bykov, Kevin Dineen, who would give the NHL a 3-2 lead, knocked down Evgeny Belosheykin when he was checked into the Soviet goalie by Vasily Pervuhkin during the first period.

That lead lasted 61 seconds. The Semenov, who gathered it in behind the defenders, Mike Ramsey of the Buffalo Sabres and Ray Bourque of Fuhr out of position before sliding the puck behind the goalie and

Soccer's Great Cubillas Isn't Good Enough in U.S. States in 1979 to play for the Fort

NEW YORK —Suppose a country weak in basketball — England, perhaps — decided to launch a nathe English say. "You can't coach bere if you don't have one of our coaching sense of the federation's period on the took one of the federation's period or the federation's period one of the federation's period of the federation of the federation's period of the federation of the federation's period of the federation of the federation's period of the federation of the federation's period of the federation coaching licenses." So they give him a series of exams on basketball theory and practice, devised and glish coaches. And they fail him.

Something similar occurred not physiology, practical coaching of long ago. For England, read United States; for basketball, read soccer, and for Julius Erving, read Teofilo Cubillas, the Peruvian star who played in three World Cups and, with 10 goals, ranks fourth, right behind Pele, among the leading scorers in World Cup history. Like Erving, be's widely respected as a player, as n gentleman and as a tutor who has a magic touch with youths. Cubillas came to the United flunked largely because he lacked a command of English. Whatever the reason, the implication that he had little to offer a national program that has yet to produce even one world-class player - and that has failed nine straight times since 1950 to qualify for the World Cup - struck some observers as odd. Eric Eichmann of Clemson University, a national team starting for-ward, said: "He's been a tremendous influence on my game, and an inspiration. It wasn't so much what he said but what he could show." Said Brian Benedict of national champion Duke University, a mid-ficider regarded as one of the most promising young U.S. players: "He coached me in Florida for a year, and I learned more from watching him than from anything else. I'd have him as my coach any day."

Art Walls, the federation coaching committee chairman, said, "Cubillas is a special case. When I first met him, I immediately saw his potential as a specialist to the program." Walls has sent a memo to the coaches involved in the "B" license course - recommending that Cubillas be invited to resit for the exams.

Mets' World Series MVP Knight Signs to Play for Orioles

NEW YORK - Ray Knight, the World Scries hero who spurned an offer of $800,000 to return to the New York Mets, finally found a home Wednesday - with the Baltimore Orioles for $300,000 less.

The 34-year-old third baseman did win something of a consolation for his winter of wandering: He will get the chance to play a second on for the Orioles if he gets into 100 games and goes to bat 400 times this season, and proves that he is more durable than the Mets thought when they parted company in December. But his only guarantee is of a salary of $500,000 for 1987.

Knight, making a comeback from injuries last season, batted .298 with 11 home runs and drove in 76 runs. In the World Series, he hit 395 and was voted the most valuable player. When the scries ended, he was eligible to become a free scened as if the Mets had treated a World agent and did, but said openly he expected to return to the Mets and hoped they would give him a two-year contract.

He asked for $1 million in salary for 1987, and a $250,000 buyout if he didn't make the team in 1988 or a salary of $1 million if he did. The Mets countered with an offer of one year at $300,000. Knight refused, and the comeback star suddenly became an exile.

He shopped for other teams but found the market slower than expected. The Mets said third base would be shared by Howard Johnson, who lost the position to Knight last season, and by Dave Magadan, a highly regarded rookie. To some, it seemed as if Knight had overSeries hero without due regard. Either way, the break was complete. And, under the rules of free agency. Knight then was prevented from signing back with the Mets until May 1. The Orioles' first-year guarantee is for $500,000. If Knight plays the second year, he would be guaranteed $525,000. In both years, he could earn up to $130,000 in performance bonuses and up to $200,000 if he wins certain awards, such as most valuable player in the league.

This is the closest I can come to my goal of two years," Knight said. Then, reflecting on two-plus years with the Mets, he added: "I'm going to miss being there opening day when they give out those World Series rings."

NBA's All-Stars Dimmed in Israel

New York Times Service NEW YORK -- The National Basketball Association has an avid following in Israel, so avid that Israel was one of only half a dozen countries whose tele networks carried Sunday's allstar game live, starting at 10:30 P.M. Israeli time.

Not every largeli is a fan, of course. And among the noulans must be counted the television tgineers on duty Sunday night. They decided that broadcasting the entire game, including the Western Conference's fourth-quarter rally and eventu-al overtime victory, just wasn't Worth staying on the job for beyoud their normal quitting time. So when it reached 12:30, they pulled the plug and went home. That led to enough process that, the next day, a tape of the missing minutes was air-expressed from New York so that the all-star finale could be included as part of Israeli television's weekly highlights.

And although it may not bring a thaw in Middle East tension, bart of the country will have ason to be grateful for a neighbor's foresight. The entire game, including the overtime period, is to be broadcast over Lebanese television on Feb. 22.

The Battle of the Models

By Paul Lewis New York Times Service

ILLE, France — When Philippe de Villiers, secretary of state for culture in France's conservative government, opened a new collection in the Invalides war museum in Paris recently, there was only one thing wrong.

Three-quarters of the exhibits intended for display were in this onrthern French city about 150 miles away, enclosed in packing cases and held under guard in a half-empty home for the elderly.

They are still here. The 600 crates piled up in a unused part of the Hospice General de Lille contain 76 out of a set of 102 scale models of the frontier cities of France. The models were commissioned by King Louis XIV

The models are being held in Lille by Pierre Mauroy, the city's mayor and a former Socialist prime minister, in a light with the new government over where they should be displayed.

The scale models, built of wood and silk and so detailed they show even carrots growing in a garden, allowed the Sun King and his generals to plan the defense of every border town and practice military maneuvers without leaving the palace of Versailles.

Until World War II they were day the models are regarded as plans to display the models in Lille.

Anne Jolly, a Mauroy aide, defended Lille's claim. "The cultural snobs of Paris just don't think we're worthy to have the scale models because we're provincials," she

For more than two centuries the models were stored in the Invalides, where several were on display in an unheated and poorly lighted museum that attracted few visitors.

Then in late 1985 Mauroy, who had been replaced as prime minis-ter by a fellow Socialist, Laurent Fabius, arranged for them to be transported to Lille for display in

The decision to move the models provoked an outcry from conservative intellectuals and opposition politicians.

The move to Lille was made hastily, apparently to resolve the matter before a general election, then only three months away, that the Socialists were expected to lose. Work on the new museum to house the models had not even begun, and the legal agreement entrusting them to Lille was completed only a few days before the election and after two-thirds of the models had

Instead, it allocated more than 60,000 square feet of space in the Invalides as a permanent home for the models. And it gave Pattyn $1 million to spend displaying some of those the Socialists had left behind.

Bertolucci: Filming in the Forbidden City

By Gordon Bowker Ñe≈ York Times Service

ELJING - The crowds of Chinese tourists visiting Beijing's Forbidden City were startled, mystified and no doubt eatertained to see what appeared to be a temporary restoration of their imperial past. Ancient Manchu ceremonies were being re-enacted by bundreds of courtiers with long plaited queues as if 20 years of civil turmoil, the Japanese war, the Chiang Kai-shek years and the coming of Mao Zedong's People's Republic had all been a fantastic dream.

But it was the re-creation of Imperial China that was fantasy. And the film cameras, the jeans and the T-shirts of a European film crew announced to the tourists that they were simply witnessing the arrival of Western show iness in the republic of Deng Xiaoping. The Forbidden City was oo longer forbidden — its labyrinth of walled pathways, palaces, gardens and courtyards was swarming with shaven-headed film extras and an international contingent of movie makers, photographers, journalists and television reporters.

In a courtyard before the Hall of Prosperity a buge assembly of richly robed courtiers, bannermen, mandarins and euruchs was attending the wedding of the last Chinese emperor. Pu Yi. It was supposedly 1922. Only as cameras were wheeled into position, as makeup girls rushed around powdering a cunuch here, a Manchu princess there, and as a floor manager yelled at a boy with a clapper board was it clear that the intruder into this version of feudal China was 20th-century technology. The man who breached the sacred and forbidden walls and was re-creating China's officially forgotten past was the Italian film director Bernardo Bertolucci, whose previous credits include "The Conformist," "Last Tango in Paris" and "1900." He began work in China in early August, filmed there until the end of November and is oow shooting interior scenes in Rome, His oew movie - his first in six years - is The Last Emperor," telling the story of Pu Yi, the last Ching emperor, enthroned at the age of 3 in 1908, dethrooed three years later and expelled from the Forbidden City by warlords in 1924, when he was only 18. The story is based on Pu Yi's autobiographi-cal "confession," composed while being "remolded" in a Chinese Communist prison in the 1950s. During the '30s, the Japanese made him puppet emperor of oc-cupied Manchuria. He was captured by the Russians in 1946 and spent five years in a Soviet prison before being returned to Mao's China as a criminal implicated in wartime atrocities. Rather than execute the last emperor, whom Mao referred to as "my predecessor," the Chinese set out to re-educate this living symbol of their feudal past. In 1959 he was pardooed and became an assistant in Beijing's botanical gardens.

"It's the story of a metamorpbosis," says Bertolucci, "the story of a dragon who is changed into a butterfly. Pu Yi is an excep-tional man, a kind of anti-hero, a man kidnapped by history and addicted to omnipotence. He is a prisoner in the Forbidden City, not allowed to leave it; be will be a prisoner of the Japanese until 1945, then of the Soviets until 1950. Then, until 1959, he is a changed in prison. What for sure changed him was freedom after prison. For the first time in his life he was like everybody else, free to ride a bicycle, free to get on a bus. I think that at that point in his life

Pu Yi was really changed."

The project, which has taken two and a half years and is budgeted at $23 million, has brought together Italian, British and Chinese technicians, as well as actors from seven countries. Among them are 19,000 extras, including 1,000 soldiers from the People's Liberation Army, playing Na-tionalist, warlord and Communist soldiers, as well as eunuchs and princes of the old Ching court.

"The Last Emperor" is the first Western feature film made in China about the People's Republic since the Communists came to power in 1949. Unlike Raffaella de Laurentiis's recent "Tai-Pan," filmed mainly in Southeast China, which ran into a tangle of red tape and conflicts with officialdom, "The Last Emperor" ploughed through relatively un-troubled waters.

For Bertolucci, behind the camera for the first time since 1981, this project has rescued him from a series of disappointing setbacks. Four years ago, long-laid plans to film Dashiell Hammett's

"Red Harvest" came to grief in Hollywood. "The Far West didn't want me, so I said, 'Let's see if the Far East can take me.'

Although the Chinese insisted on the right to approve the script, nothing was challenged, he says, except for a few details of fact.

The role of the emperor went to John Lone (the prehistoric ice-mummy in Fred Schepisi's "Iceman" and the master criminal in Michael Cimino's "Year of the Dragon"). Bertolucci met Lone, who was trained at the Peking Opera school in Hong Kong, while casting in Los Angeles. "I chose him at first sight," the director said, "I felt something very intense when f first saw him, together with a kind of weirdness. I felt that he had a natural makeup on his face, and the tough disci-pline of the Peking Opera had been sublimated in a kind of great inner tension. I think it's a very good alternative to the New York Actors Studio."

Lone plays Pu Yi from an 18year-old to a man in his 60s. They have a very different kind of old age than the Westerner, a different superficial aesthetic to their inner strength, a different body language," Lone says."
